Sir Michael, who was described as "raging" over the report, issued his statement

The association says that cautioning should be used only in cases where the offender has clearly and unambiguously admitted the offence. Police must take the greatest care to ensure that admissions are not equivocal, nor made to get the matter over with quickly.

The largest known British populations of the declining great crested newt are under threat and their fate may be sealed by this week if negotiations fail, according to the Fanna and Flora Preservation

The negotiations have been held with "a big multinational company" to dissuade it from filling in two chalk pits in north Kent, thought to contain about 3,000 creatures each. So concerned are the society and the British Herpetological Society with the plight of the newt that they are to raise the issue at next month's meeting in Strasbourg of the Berne Convention, which sets the standards for European wildlife

He said the Nature Conservancy Council was in-volved in the Kent negotiations, but there was doubt whether it would be able to move in time to protect the chalk pits. In previous disputes involving the great crested newt, the NCC had issued licences to remove the creatures - almost always, Mr Langton said, to sites that were less suitable.

How our clients looked last year when they said goodbye to £25 million

Over the past 12 months, 2,000 of our clients were faced with bad debts averaging £12,000 apiece. They didn't rum a hair. Their cash flow was maintained. The debts were owed by customers whose credit our clients had taken the sensible precaution of insuring.

In total we actually paid out £25 millions. We didn't turn a hair either, because that is preciseh what we are in business to do.

£12,000 BAD DEBT = £240,000LOST TURNOVER

You can see why these clients ended up smiling when you think what writing off such a bad debt actually means. It could well send you to Carey Street. To cover that one £12,000 bad debt, a firm making, for example, 5% pre-tax profit on turnover would have to find and service £240,000 of extra business. It's well worth reflecting what your major customers owe you at any one time. You could be relying on any one of them for very much more than £12,000.

It is no more sensible to leave your company uninsured against such a risk than to leave your premises uninsured against fire and theft. Bad debts are part of business life and Trade Indemnity Credit Insurance has, for 60 years, been the simple way to stop it hurting.

UP TO 90% OF YOUR MONEY BACK

Trade Indemnity policies are all tailormade to the client's business and in particular to his customer's credit needs. Their main effect is to ensure that when a debtor has become insolvent the client gets 75% to 90% of his money within 30 days of confirmation of debt.

As you can imagine, that kind of protection takes quite a load off your mind when you are signing a big contract or if you depend heavily on a few large customers.

But credit insurance has other advantages quite apart from business protection and peace of mind.

YOU AVOID BAD DEBTS

By the nature of our business, we maintain one of the UKs largest data banks on the credit performance of UK companies.

This data bank and our wide experience of credit management also benefit your business generally Because we have to pay off your bad debts, we work hard to ensure that you avoid bad credit risks and manage your credit better.

Remember that +0% of the assets of most British companies are tied up in credit. So any improvement in the way your customers pay their accounts is bound to be very beneficial to your business. Certainly it is something your bankers will expect you to take very seriously: Talk to your brokers about Trade Indemnity Credit Insurance now before you have to say goodbye to any more vital capital.

How the synod works: 1

Conservative body moving ahead of church members

General Synod is reaching something of a crisis after 14 years in existence. Its latest proposals about divorce and rejected by most dioceses, the second time this has happened. Parliament recently threw out an attempt to modernize some Anglican procedure.
Yet nothing characterizes the synod more than enormous selfconfidence, and utter conviction that synodical government demand a "vote by houses". is the best thing to happen to

Its formation and structure were approved by Parliament in 1969, replacing an untidy pattern of governing bodies, notably the Church Assembly and the assemblies of clergy, the convocations, although the latter retained a mysterious econdary existence as independent entities. The principle was that three separate bodies, representing the three "estates", laity, clergy, and bishops, should meet as one, to reach a common mind representing the

The 13,000 clergy are distributed unevenly around the 14 dioceses, in turn grouped into York (which is smaller). They elect from their number "proctors", members of the general synod by their membership of one of the two convocations.

If there is a problem with the general synod's general constitution, it lies mostly in this house. It is by no means clear that it is truly representative, devise an alternative realizes how hard it is to apply democratic principles.

In general synod elections, proportional representation is applied, adding to the difficulty. The average Anglican parishioner is represented in the general synod through his representative and through the diocese's representatives on the national synod. Army's presence preserves uneasy peace in Punjab

From Kuldip Nayar Chandigarh

The strife-torn state of Punjab is tense, but quiet, as reports of the riots in other parts of India in which many Sikhs have been killed reach the villages in which Sikhs are in an overwhelming majority.

I travelled from the state capital, Chandigarh, by the grand trunk road towards Amritsar, and in the towns and villages along the way it was possible to sense the anger and inguish of the Sikhs and the waiting possible retaliation.

The street of the most populous towns I visited were bronged with Sikhs and Hindus, and business was going on much as usual. There were crowds near roadside stalls of vegetables, fruit and food, perhaps because the curiew is clamped on early in most of Punjab and shopping has to be done quickly.

However, although they do business together - and al-though peace committees with nembers of both communities have been set up in all the towns - the social polarization is plain to see. Sikhs and Hindus no longer mix socially, a divide which causes some strain among families with members of both communities: intermarriage has been com-

The Hongkong Bar Associ-ation has refused to endorse the joint declaration of agreement between Britain and China on the future of Hongkong.

At a two-and-a-half-hour closed meeting last week, the British-trained lawyers ex-pressed opposition to the nationality clause in the agreement, which is to be debated by Parliament next month.

The draft agreement, which has been initialled by British and Chinese negotiators in Peking, lays down that Hongkong people who hold "British territory" passports will be unable to pass that national status on to their children after 1997, when sovereignty over the territory reverts to China. After that date, according to the agreement, Chinese people living in Hongkong will be eligible for passports defining their citizenship as "Hongkong China", unless they hold depen dent territory passports already.

The Hongkong British passport does not bestow automatic right of entry, residence or employment in the United Kingdom, but many Hongkong Chinese would prefer it to the Peking-endorsed travel docu-

Diplomatic | Teachers in scramble to revive talks on Lebanon

From Christopher Walker Jerusalem

Intense diplomatic efforts were under way yesterday in an attempt to secure a resumption of the Israeli-Lebanese troop withdrawal talks which were suspended by the Lebanese Government after only one preliminary session.

After a meeting of the Cabinet here, a spokesman disclosed that Israel was not planning at this stage to release the four Shia Muslim leaders from southern Lebanon whose arrest by Israeli troops last Thursday led to the suspension of the talks.

His toughly worded state-ment alleged that the Shia Amal organization to which the detainees belong was "very much involved in many attacks on Israeli soldiers" and that the Government was not planning to release the four "just in order for the talks to resume."

Military sources here claimed that the arrest of the four - who were all wanted men - was coincidental with the delayed start last Thursday of the UNchaired talks in the village of Nagoura.

But diplomatic sources dismissed the assertion as naive, saying that the consequences of the arrests must have been obvious to the Israeli defence establishment.

Savimbi threatens drive on Luanda if peace moves exclude Unita

The Angolan guerrilla leader, Dr Jonas Savimbi, has issued a warning from his rebel lair here that his forces will obstruct any attempt to negotiate a peace scttlement in Angola and neighbouring Namibia which does not include his Unita organization.

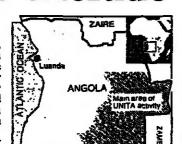

A declaration issued by Dr Savimbi at the end of a week-long extraordinary congress of Unita said that the United States and South Africa should understand that Unita would not "accept being traded in for a fictitious withdrawal of the Cubans from Angola".

The congress, attended by 400 delegates from 14 of the country's 16 provinces, was convened against the background of a new offer by Angola to send home the Cuban troops stationed there in exchange for the independence of Namibia now occupied by South Africa.

At a press conference here last Friday, attended by nearly 50 foreign and South African reporters flown in from Johannesburg in two ancient Dakota aircraft to a rough airstrip hacked out of the bush, Dr Savimbi said that, if Unita was not brought in on the peace negotiations, it would "certainly take advantage" of any withdrawal of Cuban troops.

By December 20, he said, he would have 7,000 men "ready close on Luanda the Angolan capital] strongly". The object would not be to take the city, but to isolate it and "make impossible so that the ambassadors there will send different messages to their government". The British and French ambassadors. he ambassadors, claimed, had been particularly unfair in their reports about

Dr Savimbi said Unita had been delighted by the reelection of President Reagan, but was disturbed by the role of the State Department in the present negotiations. If the MPLA regime in Luanda was now prepared to talk, it was mainly because of the pressure put on it by Unita, and Washington must recognize that.

Although he repeatedly referred to Mr P W Botha, the South African President as "my friend," Dr Savimbi, a burly, bearded figure in green fatigues. acknowledged that Pretoria had the region, and could not be counted on to remain a source of support for ever. He maintained that even it Namibia became independent, thus severing his direct links with the South Africans, other supply lines could be arranged, and Unita would survive. It had been in worse positions before. A black nationalist government in Namibia would not be strong enough to attack Unita in the rear on Luanda's behalf.

Unita, he contended, had always been "ready and available" to talk to the MPLA about the formation of a government of national unity. President Eduardo Dos Santos and the Government knew that, and it was up to them to ask for such talks.

The only thing Unita could never accept, Dr Savimbi said, was a partition of Angola.

Dr Savimbi said he was sure that President Dos Santos was lying when he said he was prepared to send the Cubans home, and he would soon emerge "in his true colours".

That was because, as long as he was not prepared to deal with

Unita, he would need the Cubans to protect his regime. There were many questions about the Cubans which needed answering. How many were there? There was talk of only non-combatant Cubans leaving. But what about the pilots, intelligence officers, logistics Journalists who for weeks had been eliciting denials from Sandinista leaders and scepticism from diplomatic sources bout the imminent arrival of MiGs suddenly found them-selves racing to the port of Corinto to see what was coming off the Soviet cargo ship, Bakuriani.

They were not sure exactly what they were looking for and all they discovered with any certainty was the existence of an obscure military science called "crateology". But the Sandinistas were

Two very essential differences produce the comparative harmony of the People's Europe Committee and the comparative discord of the councils.

Firstly, People's Europe men are not politicians but senior civil servants. It is, perhaps, a contradiction that a group of faceless bureaucrats should have been given the task of putting a human face on Europe, but they have the advantage of having no obvious political axe to grind. The second, and inevitably more important difference, is that they are not taking decisions that involve spending more than the bare minimum of money. Lack of money is the root of all Community indecision.

Returning MPs seek more aid to end Ethiopian 'holocaust'

Three British MPs who have spent five days in Ethiopia returned home yesterday to urge the Government to provide substantial long-term aid for what they called the "hunger holocaust".
They will contact the Minister for Overseas Development. Mr Timothy Raison, today to. ask for a meeting with him before an adjournment debate on the crisis, scheduled for Wednesday, and to persuade him to visit Ethiopia himself. They also plan talks on Wednesday with Mr Malcolm Rifkind, Minister of State at the

The MPs, Mr Tony Baldry, Conservative MP for Banbury, Mr Andrew Bennett, Labour MP for Denton and Reddish, and Mr Archy Kirkwood, Liberal MP for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, visited some of the worst-affected famine areas and talked to officials of the Ethiopian Government and relief organizations. They left distressed and convinced that much greater aid commitments are required from Britain and the EEC.

Mr Baidry said: "We want to see a sustained, coordinated long-term campaign of help. There has been 10 years of failure by both West and East to prevent the current disaster.

The MPs said that although the Ethiopians were grateful for the help Britain was giving, they were very fearful that it was going to run out soon.

They said Mr Raison should come to Ethiopia and see the disaster for himself. The television pictures did not convey the extent of the catastrophe.

The MPs left amid conflicting reports of a potential shortage of grain arriving in Ethiopia for famine relief. Some officials believe that only 16,000 tons remain to be unloaded at the main port of Assad and that promised supplies are not arriving promptly enough to feed refugees.

Child labour: Part 1

When a lifetime's work begins at six

International attempts to abolish child labour have continued for decades, but every year poverty forces millions of children into adult work. In the first of a two-part series, Alan McGregor in Geneva looks at the extent to which young lives

As the world population rises rapidly towards the 5,000 million mark, the first victims are young children. More than 60 years after the International Labour Conference adopted the first of nine conventions to abolish it, child labour is still a widespread and apparently growing phenomenon.

The number of children under 15 described by the International Labour Organization as prematurely leading adult lives - in working long hours for low wages in con-ditions harmful to their health, physical and mental development - is put conservatively at 50 million, almost all, of course, in Third World countries. A lifetime's labour begins for some at the age of six o

Both national and international standards are flouted with impunity by employers who have children on 10-hour days, six days a week, in small industrial workshops or even send them underground into the mines. Young girls are given the task of handling micro-scopically fine wires, often resulting in severe eyesight deterioration within five to eight years. By comparison, shepherd boys, subcontracted next at the end of the list.

In Greece, where the formes practice of hiring young girls for domestic service has almost completely died out - the same thing is happening also in Egypt, - small workshops are known still to be taking on children for short periods and dismissing them before they become eligible for social insurance.

An investigation among 32 fifth-year primary school pupils at Altamura in southern Italy showed that 18 worked round the year, usually five or six hours a day - except for four young bakers doing nine to twelve hours - and nine others worked during the summer with their parents in bars or on farms. Arthit sticks to his guns in Bangkok

From Neil Kelly

The Thai Government is standing firm against renewed demands by General Arthit Kamlang-ek, the supreme mili-tary commander, for a revaluation of the currency, which was devalued last week by almost 15 per cent. He is also calling for the dismissal of some Cabinet ministers.

General Arthit, appearing in Bangkok at the weekend for the first time since the onset of the devaluation crisis, said he would continue to condemn the Government's decision.

Although he suffered serious loss of face when the Prime Minister rejected his demands, the controversial supreme commander appears determined to maintain his confrontation with the Government.

Some of General Arthit's senior colleagues have had second thoughts about backing him. Four of the senior officers who originally supported his demands have since pledged their loyalty to General Prem

On his return to Bangkok, General Arthit immediately called in senior Army officers and commanders of combat units of the Army and police for talks. He also had a meeting with railway and other workers now preparing strikes

Hawke gets boost as jobless figures fall

When you are on everything seems to go right. That is certainly the case with the Australian Labour Government which emoys a substantial lead in the opinion polls for the December I election. The latest news to boost the party's stocks was the release of the unemployment figures which show that Australia's jobless rate has dropped to the lowest in two years, a fact the Government was quick to claim as a vindication of its economic policies.

The statistics could not have come at a better time for Mr Bob Hawke, the Australian Prime Minister. He was so delighted that he announced the figures on the campaign trail two hours ahead of schedule. They show that 8.0 per cent, or 617,300 of the work force was without a job, a fall from the previous month's figure of 8.8

The figures, however, showed a slowing down in the rate of employment growth, a fact that the opposition attempted to highlight in an effort to corb the Government's enthusiasm. But the headlines featured the drop in unemployment. The oppo-sition's warnings of problems in 1985 and beyond may well be correct, but they are not likely, to win them any points with the: electorate.

There was more bad news on Friday for the opposition in The lige newspaper opinion poll which showed that the previous week's revival of support for the coalition parties had faltered from 39 per cent to 36 per cent in a week.

Another poll in The Justra-lian on Wednesday showed the Government would be returned with a majority of 48 seats in the House of Representatives on a swing of slightly more than 20 per cent. The government's present majority is 25 seats.

President Reagan's reelection and Australia's premier horse race, the Melbourne Cupt election promises were few and far between.

The Liberal Party's coalition partner, the National Party, outlined its programme in a policy speech by its leader, Mr lan Sinclair, which promised and A$8 (about £5.80) a week tax cut for single-income families on the average wage under the opposition's already announced income-splitting tax arrange-

Mr Sinclair's statement was immediately qualified by the Liberal Party, which said the benefit would not necessarily come in the first year of a coalition government.

This week should see the campaign get into top gear with the Labour Party's policy declaration on Tuesday followed two days later by that of

Like most other white collar workers, police officers work at least eight hours a day, five days a week.

HARROW: An old lady hasn't been seen for a few days and the milk is piling up on her doorstep. A Woman Police Constable breaks in and finds her dead on the floor. Foul play? The Inspector and Police Surgeon are called in.

There the similarity ends. In a place like London, accidents, football matches, demonstrations, crime, tourists, and the like keep us busy twenty four hours a day, seven days a week.

And since quite a lot of our work involves dealing with London's anti-social elements, anti-social hours are what we tend to work.

You could find yourself up well before the lark on Early Turn, 6am to 2pm.

BERMONDSEY: The Community Liaison Officer visits a local youth club to talk about the dangers of drugs and glue-sniffing. The kids complain about being 'picked on,' so the message doesn't get through this time. Or you could be putting in a hard day's night while most law-abiding folk are comfortably parked in front of the television.

Look on the bright side, though.

While everyone else is slaving away at work, you can spend an afternoon in the garden or at the squash club.

So much for routine.

There's not much chance of anyone settling into a

The reason for all these airborne command posts is the working assumption that all the ground command posts - the Pentagon, the bunker at Fort Ritchie, the Strategic Air Command underground posts at Offutt and Cheyenne Mountain - will be demolished about 30 minutes into the war. Even before his plane is in the air, the President has to make a hard decision: does he order the Strategic Air Com-mand to launch its Minuteman Intercontinental Ballistic Missiles or does he wait to find out where and when the Soviet

While SAC is launching the missiles and passing final target orders to the bombers, the Navy orders its submarines to prepare to launch their nuclear missiles. The Navy has ground-based low-frequency and very-low-frequency radio broadcast stations, but these too have to be considered expendable.

Always in the air over the Atlantic is a TACAMO (Take Charge and Move Out) plane which trails a long wire antenna to broadcast the Emergency Action Message via very-low-frequency radio to the sub-merged ballistic missile submarines. Many of the subs will be instructed to stand by for later launch orders. Others will launch missiles immediately, so as to "soften up" Soviet air defences for the approaching B-52s, FB-111s, and air-launched cruise missiles.

It would seem to be all over at this point. Nuclear war. National destruction. As the military might put it, "Deter-rence has failed". Bombers and subs may wreak their revenge, their "retaliatory strikes", but they'll have little to come home

But such is not current military thinking. According to General Richard Ellis, USAF

plan, to have options available to the President, to have an enduring capability that can last for an indefinite period, and to be able to exercise control over a reconstituted force after perhaps several exchanges."

s a first step toward building a control network, the Air Force has put together the Air Force Satellite Communi-cations Network (AFSAT-COM). It has no satellites devoted solely to its purposes its transponders (relay radios) ride on other satellites. One type of satellite with AFSAT-COM equipment is the FLT-SATCOM.

But how plausible is the idea of a "limited" or "protracted" nuclear war? In a report to Congress, Harold Brown, Secretary of Defence under President Carter, emphasized that the new preparations for "nuclear war lighting" that he was promoting did not mean he was promoting did not mean he thought we could "win" a nuclear war, but only that he wanted to persuade the Soviets that they could not win one.

It's not clear that all the uniformed military men are quite so pessimistic. For ant James W. Stansberry, head of the Air Force Electronic Systems Division, was recently quoted as saying: "The idea that there was no way to win a nuclear war exchange sort of invalidated the need for anything survivable. There is a shift now in nuclear weapons planning, and a proper element in nuclear deterrence is that we be able to keep on fighting."

By the logic of the Looking Glass world, the best way to avoid nuclear war is to be convincingly ready to fight it. A Lee Lorenz cartoon in The New Yorker has one general say to another. As I see it, our commitment to the peace commitment to the peace process is only credible if our commitment to the war process is credible."

That expresses the logic of deterrence exactly. It is not enough that the Soviet Union society and economy in a nuclear war. Soviet military planners, the logic goes, are most likely to be deterred from risking war if they believe that after the first round, they will have fewer nuclear weapons left in reserve than the US does.

They should be made to believe that no matter what else happens to our society, the US will be able to continue lobbing nuclear weapons back and forth as long as they can; that no matter how much damage they can inflict on the United States. they will suffer even more damage themselves;

Building satellite communications systems that can survive nuclear war is a demanding task. The satellites themselves might come under Soviet attack. Nuclear explosions emit intense bursts of energy across and Soviet radio jamming the electromagnetic spectrum - attempts.

So Pentagon planners, particularly those in the Air Force Space and Electronic Systems divisions, are busily trying to cope with the threats. The FLTSATCOM satellites, for example, are "nuclear hardened" against the electromagnetic pulse effect, as are the AFSATCOM terminals.

The next generation of Defence Satellite Communications Systems satellites now being deployed is also EMP-resistant. General Electric has designed the satellite to resist the effects of nuclear weapons

This can damage all kinds of electronic equipment, in space relay radio signals not only from one point on the ground to

For three years running, the Pentagon went to Congress with a proposal for the Strategic Satellite System (STRATSAT). whose sole purpose was to maintain communications during nuclear war. After the third year of rejection, the communi-cations planners dropped STRATSAT, went back to their drawing boards, and came up with Milstar (Military Strategic Tactical and Relay). The idea is to combine more communications services in on type of satellite. Unlike STRATSAT, Milstar will prob ably be in geostationary orbit like STRATSAT, it will be designed to survive a nuclear war and provide "strategic connectivity" to the nuclear forces. Major General Gerald Hendricks, vice commander of the Air Force Space Division, boasted in 1982: "Milstar is designed to be a war-fighting system. The first of its kind." The Defence Advanced

Research Projects Agency (DARPA) is studying PACSAT - Passive Communications Satellite. In a low orbit would be a 3,000-foot chain of thousands of small spherical reflectors, less than an inch across. Although Soviet radars or telescopes wouldn't be able to spot them. US transmitters could bounce radio messages off them, sending out Emergency Action Messages to the nuclear

Ideas like PACSAT are the responsibility of the Strategic Technology Office at DARPA. Colonel Charles Heimach, USAF, Assistant Director for office in 1981, said: "For many years people felt that the execution of the SIOP (Single Integrated Operation Plan) would be that everything was thrown at each side and the world came to an end, and so you really didn't care about the

"Well, now people are start-ing to rethink what might happen in a war. The problem is, you can't sign up to one scenario: the worst can happen in many different ways, and you have to prepare to deal with it."

A plane man's guide to the flying circus

An experienced traveller can be defined as someone who knows what the different classes on today's airlines mean. Most of us, to be honest, are therefore not experienced travellers, as airline class divisions are almost as confusing as British class divisions.

So here, as a service to readers, is a brief catalogue of the classes you are most likely to meet in international air Travel Class (also known as Tourist Class, Ordinary Class and Punter Class): This is the ordinary basic class of travel, which you are entitled to if you have paid the full fare. If you have paid less than the full fare, you go into a superior class. Going travel class entitles you to leg-room (i.e. room for one leg), a view of the central aisle and a personal light over head, so positioned that it shines on your scalp and casts your book into shadow.

It is advisable to go to the lavatory before boarding, be-cause as soon as the Fasten Seat Belt sign is switched off, the cabin crew wheel forward a trolley to block your access to the toilets for the rest of the flight.

Club Class (sometimes called Business Class, Executive Class, etc): Exactly the same as Travel Class except that there is a curtain between the two. This is drawn after take-off to make the people in Travel Class feel they're missing something.
What they are missing is only a free drink, and a tape recording of laughter, singing, cries of joy etc, which is switched on to make Travel Class feel they're really missing something. Upper Middle Class: This is small section towards the front of the plane, reserved entirely for very famous people who do not wish to be recognized. Once word gets around the plane about the VIPs on board, everyone for the other classes goes to have a look. This class usually also contains a distinguished looking mother with a squalling brat, so that the VIPs can get no sleep. No wonder the famous people always look tired.

Middle Middle Class: This is mostly found on the largest planes and consists of seats right in the middle of rows of five seats, so that the occupant cannot reach his luggage, go to the lavatory, see a window, talk to a stewardess or take his shoes off without being very unpopu-lar indeed. You get a very good view of the movie, though. Even if, as is normally the case, you don't want to.

Brief Case Class: The airline companies have discovered that business travellers do a lot of travelling, so they have begun to install a class equipped with secretaries, tape recorders, tick-cr-tape machines, photographs of their wives in gilt frames, etc. As most businessmen want only to get mildly drunk and flirt with the stewardess, this seems misplaced enterprise.

Cabin Class: This is the most exclusive class, as you get your own cabin, right at the front of anyone. Unfortunately, you also have to fly the plane.

Standing Class: On every plane you will find some smokers trapped in the non-smoking areas. They all drift eventually to an unused area at the back of the plane and stand there smoking with all the nonchalant guiltiness of people glimpsed inside betting shops. They are made even more guilty by stewards who cannot get past and people who think they are the queue for the toilets.

Toilet Class: Many people prefer to spend an aeroplane bathroom, which is why the toilets on planes are engaged so lone and so often.

Master Class: Here you have to share with Yehudi Menuhin. Study Class: Air travellers are divided into two main groups. Those who, when the plane comes to a standstill, stay in their seats and go to sleep and those who jump to their feet and stand motionless, and embarrassed, for 10 minutes. These are known as standbys.

Steward Class: The only class which is according to the control of the control of

The story may be a little exagger-ated and a little outmoded but many French women who have reached the top in what used to be considered an exclusively male domain complain that they still feel they are flattered and charmed, but treated with a certain confescension by men. They are not quite taken seriously.

Abortion is now virtually free. New, much tougher legislation on equality at work has been brought in to allow unions to take cases to court on behalf of members, and to shift the burden of proof from employee to employer. The only jobs where the applicant's sex may now be specified are those in which a particular sex is essential for the job, such as modelling and acting.

Training opportunities for girls, although still much scarcer than those for boys, have been greatly increased. Committees have been set up to weed out "sexist cliches" from school

The Ministry of Women's Rights has been upgraded and given a budget of its own which, although still small, amounting to only a little over £9m this year, at least gives it real power for the first time. The ministry is in the hands of a tough, feminist militant, Mme Yvette Roudy, aged 55, who is better known for her aggressive energy and direct manner than for her charm and diplomacy.

But times are changing, and the past 20 years have seen extraordinary progress for the emancipation of women in France. It is sometimes difficult to remember that French women did not get the vote until the end of the Second World War, that modern forms of contraception were not legalized until 1967; and that abortion was not legalized until 1975.

During the past decade in particular, one male bastion after another has fallen. A woman was finally elected a member of the Academie Francaise, France's most exclusive "club", in 1980, and there are now female airline pilots, rugby referees, casino croupiers, ambassadors, prefeis - the highest government representatives in the departements - bank presidents, company managing directors, army generals, Cabinet ministers, police chiefs, and even a lord chief justice.

Their numbers, however, are still small. As in Britain, women now constitute nearly half the total workforce but are still predominantly in low-paid unskilled jobs. A law requiring equal pay for equal work has been in existence since 1972 but a woman's average pay remains about a quarter lower than a man's.

The armed forces, which began their so-called "feminization" 13 years ago, have now opened their doors to women in virtually all units, except the combat divisions. The élite army officer training school at St Cyr has been accepting women for five years; the air force has trained women as pilots since 1972, though not yet as fighter pilots; and the navy has been taking women on to its battleships on an experimental basis since last year.

The Government has even just appointed its first female junior efence minister and has announced that women are soon to be admitted to the army's infantry and tank

Progress in politics has been slower. There even seems to have been some regression compared with the situation immediately after the war when 42 women MPs were returned. But that was exceptional; throughout the Fifth Republic until 1978, fewer than 10 women were elected.

There are now 28 women out of a total of 491 députés, and 10 women out of 307 senators. In local government, the situation is not much better - women represent 14 per cent of municipal councillors and 3 per cent of mayors.

The Socialists recently tried to introduce a Bill stipulating that a minimum of 30 per cent of candidates on party lists for local elections had to be women, but the Bill was deemed to be unconstitutional and had to be dropped. It was probably just as well, as the parties were having great difficulty finding enough women who wanted to stand.

Women are nevertheless managing to break through at the top. Although the new Government contains the same number of women ministers six out of a total of 42 - as the previous Mauroy Government and the Barre Government of 1978, a record number of three, out of 16, have been given full Cabinet posts, including two with responsibility for the key, traditionally "male" minis-tries of industry, trade and social

Lower down, attitudes are changing, but more slowly. Often it is the women themselves, particularly those who stay at home, who represent society's most conservative element.

A poll five years ago showed 59 per cent of housewives who had never gone out to work were opposed to the idea of a woman as president, compared with only 38 per cent of women who had, or used to have, jobs. The latest polls suggest that only 18 per cent of both men and women would now be opposed to a woman

Giscard d'Estaing was the first to create a ministry specifically for women's affairs. He was also the first to appoint a woman to a senior ministerial post, if one discounts the woman appointed for one year as health minister after the war.

Giscard came to power when things were already changing. More and more girls were staying on at school to take their baccalaureat before going on to university. Women now constitute 50 per cent of the university population. The événements of 1968 had had a dramatic liberalizing effect on French mores and attitudes. The feminist movement was young strong and vocal. Giscard, himself genuinely sympathetic to the liberationists' cause, played on the prevalent mood.

During the seven years of his presidency 10 major Bills concerning women's rights were pushed through, compared with three in the 11 years of de Gaulle's rule, legalizing abortion, introducing equity at work, allowing divorce by mutual consent, changing the tax laws and so on.

Much of it, however, was ineffective. Abortion, although legal, had to be paid for in full, for example, and a woman who believed she had been discriminated against at work had to prove her own case before the courts. It was left to the Socialists, long associated with women's rights, to consolidate what Giscard had begun.

Mme Roudy has achieved some important results, but even some feminists now feel she is going too far in her efforts to improve the image of women. She received a bad press for her proposed "anti-sexist" Bill, based on the existing anti-racist legislation, which would make it an offence to publish an image of a woman which was degrading, demeaning or liable to discrimination against

Mme Roudy's proposals to "femi-nize" the French language by introducing feminine versions of now exclusively masculine words have been greeted with no greater enthusi-

When asked if having a Ministry of Women's Rights was not somewhat sexist, Mine Roudy retorted: "Of course not! There are 41 other ministries looking after men's rights:"

The feminist movement is virtually non-existent as a political force in France. Always deeply divided and never as militant as their American or British counterparts, the French feminists seem to have been emasculated (if that is not too contradictory) by having a party in power that is rooting for their own cause.

But the country which produced one of the world's greatest feminists, Simone de Beauvoir, whose seminal book The Second Sex, was published 35 years ago, has never really been interested in women's liberation. A recent poll showed that most French women consider motherhood the most important thing for a woman's happiness, followed by life as a couple, (married or unmarried). Having a job came a poor third. Both of us were hoping to compare favourably with Mrs Yvonne Stayt, the general secretary of the Campaign for the Feminine Woman, with whom we were due to appear on the BBC programme, Taking Sides, which goes out simultaneously on television and Somehow or other I had got it into my head that Mrs Stayt was a Dolly Parton lookalike, all girlish ruffles and startling measurements. This was be-cause I had confused her with Bettine LeBeau, the head of a rival organization called the Feminine Touch, who had not been asked to appear on the programme, perhaps because she was fully occupied in making her husband's toast.

It was Mrs LeBeau who once advocated cutting toast into heart shapes before serving, an enterprise which would not leave anyone much time to do anything else of a morning.

Although Mrs Stayt's pro-motional literature is "in praise of femininity and the feminine woman" and states that "the female role is essentially submissive", Mrs Stayt is the most unsubmissive women you could possibly imagine. Her iron-grey hair is cut severely and short and instead of the frothy dress and ridiculous stilettos that I had mentally assigned to her, her chosen outfit was a brick her chosen outfit was a brisk wool suit and comfy brogues.-I suspect that Mrs Stayt serves her husband toast, which is cut into no-nonsense squares, with the crusts left on.

The programme, on women and work, which resulted from these strange encounters was merely the tip of the iceberg. The real dramas took place afterwards in the hospitality room. It was there that a woman company director swore that never again would she use a particular recruitment agency since its chief executive, another participant on Taking Sides, had publicly admitted that a woman's place was not in the boardroom.

"How can I trust someone to find staff for me", she raged, "if state seems in he's already weeded out per-ignore them.

Yet one man on Taking Sides brought out the old saw about the "immorality" of women working, which made me splutter indignantly. After the programme, the man who had so enraged me said: "I'm sorry I upset you; I just wanted to stir

Pity the French feminists deter-mined to rewrite the dictionary in the interests of equality, for they live in a country whose language has little neutral ground and every concept from le plaisir to la tristesse has been designated a gender. Yvette Roudy, the minister for women's rights, has appointed a com-mission to seminize professions which have, until now, always been in the masculine gender but it is hard work and leads to anomalies. La juge looks a bit peculiar, for example. And the feminization of some words leads to confusion since it completely alters the meaning. For instance, a head of state (chef d'état) can't easily change gender because a cheftained'état is a oirl ouide can hear mutterings that that is exactly what a female head of state seems like but I choose to

Defective case

Count Nikolai Tolstoy, president of the Soviet Prisoners Afghan Rescue Committee, condemned Lord Bethell yesterday for bringing the defecting Russian soldiers - who returned to their homeland yesterday - to Britain in the first place. Count Tolstoy said the soldiers were the last people who should have been brought over", and Lord Bethell may now have ruined the committee's chances of getting more deserving Russian cases out of Afghonistan, "We knew all about these two soldiers. Our representative visited them in Pakistan long before Lord Bethell, Unfortunately they were hopeless drug addicts on opium. We now fear the experience of these men will harm our efforts to bring out about 20 other soldiers at a time when we were gaining the confidence of western governments to accept them. Lord Bethell never sought our help or advice." Lord Bethell replied that the alternative to bringing the soldiers over was to "let them rot and die... they implored me to help them and I did", he said.

Home truths

The two Russian soldiers were due to leave London today for a new home in Manchester. The move, arranged by Lady Phillimore - a White Russian who had recently hosted the soldiers for weekends at her home in Henley in Oxfordshire would have meant living with people their own age. The elderly Ukrainian couple with whom they had been staying in Acton, west London, told my reporter Frances Welch that the two young men were desperately homesick. The soldiers, who were paying their rent out of Social Security, had become bored. listless, and sat around all day watching television, drinking and listening to Russian records. In the past few weeks the soldiers' only lifeline was the chance of emigrating to Canada, but I understand this was refused because of their drug-taking record: "The news that they could not go came as a terrible blow". said the couple. Their English was limited to a few words, and although Lady Phillimore arranged for them to attend English lessons, the couple doubted they ever attended: "Their hearts were not in it - the pull home was too strong".

Cross bones

Chay Blyth's collarbone was broken not during but after the rescue off Cape Horn. Blyth was being hauled aboard the Kirishima, a Chilean fishing vessel, when a wave caught him and banged him against the side, dislocating his shoulder, "The ship's doctor, who wasn't really a doctor, tried to put it back again, and in his enthusiasm broke my collarbone", a disgruntled Mr B told me yesterday from his hospital bed in Chile.

Docked pay

NUM organizers in Yorkshire now know how it feels to be on the wrong end of industrial action over differentials. Last week Barnsley area pickets, usually paid £15 a car load, demanded parity with com-rades in other parts of the coalfield who, they claimed, were getting £21 a day. This piece of picketline trivia is being treated seriously by solicitors representing working miners. They will argue in the High Court today that it proves their allegation that Yorkshire NUM is using official union funds to finance unlawful picketing.

Poland: the fight goes on

Adam Michnik is a Polish Orwell. Like Orwell, he has turned political writing into an art. Like Orwell, he has devoted much of his life as well as his work to the pursuit of moral absolutes in politics. One of the most charismatic figures in Poland's democratic opposition, he was among the KOR (Workers' Defence Committee) activists released without trial following the July amnesty. Now he is back in his Warsaw flat, surrounded by piles of books, published officially and otherwise. In the first major interview which he has given since his release, he criticized the Jaruzelski regime and said a personal "thank you" for western sanctions - although the threat of rearrest hangs over him all the time. After the murder of Father Jerzy Popieluszko he felt he could no longer keep silent: "I think that to some extent we are all responsible for this murder," he said.

When he and his friends read a pseudonymous article by govern-ment spokesman Jerzy Urban which a few weeks before his death, "we reacted only with irony and disgust .. None of us had sufficient magination to see in that article a portent of murder, Today I think that if I had then had more imagination, and had publicly accused Urban of incitement to murder, I might have been sen-tenced for slander, but Father Jerzy might still be alive".

Would he then say that the Jaruzelski government is directly responsible for the murder? "It is directly responsible at least in the sense that it has educated Security Service functionaries (secret policemen) in the conviction that they can murder with impunity. In the last 10 or 15 years no functionary of the Security Service has been brought to court for violence against a citizen, so long as that citizen was a political opponent." And he went on to enumerate, with a slow passion, the main cases of state violence, from the shooting of workers on the Baltic coast in December 1970 to the last victims of martial law.

The assassination of Popieuszko, he said, "is certainly the deepest shock since December 13, 1981" when Jaruzerski declared the "state of war". The consequences are impossible to predict - as were the consequences of the reprisals against workers in Radom in 1976, which led to the founding of KOR, and ultimately to August 1980 . . .

Michnik declined to pass judgment on Cardinal Glemp's repeated appeals for calm and order over the last few weeks. But he did offer his own ideas on the best way to preempt unrest. The path to calm is the organization of a movement to bring the security apparatus under social control. All Poland's historical experience tells us that appeals for calm . . . may in practice turn out to

He returned insistently to this theme. There are only two ways to solve all the accumulated, painful conflicts in Poland, he said: "Either by force or by dialogue. . I am absolutely convinced that the leaders of Solidarity, whether Lech Walensa or Zbigniew Bujak, are ready for a dialogue . . . but they want a dialogue - that is talks between citizens, not between prison governor and prisoners." He would like to think that some broad national agreement, like those of August 1980, was still possible. But the only path to agreement is that of independent organization. The Poles must organize themselves in selfdefence against people like the murderers of Father Popieluszko, and those who hired them.

I mentioned the interest displayed by some sectors of the western peace movement in dialogue with opposition activists in Eastern Europe. "Of course we always need dialogue with people of good will", said Michnik, "But people should understand that wars do not break out because people possess guns. Wars break out because people create political systems directed towards expansion and conquest. The Germans attacked Poland and the whole world in 1939 not because they had tanks but because they had Hitler.* And the contemporary moral: "The struggle for peace only makes sense in today's world as a struggle for the respect of human rights. 200 hundred years have western states and western public opinion behaved so loyally and so wisely as they do now." Poland, he explained, has a "betrayal complex". Poles feel they will always be betrayed by the West, as they were in the period of the partitions, in the Napoleonic era, at the time of our national risings, and at the time of Yalta.... Before December 13 no reasonable person in Poland would have expected that, as a result of some political catastrophe, the West would come to our aid. At least I can say that of myself - I often spoke in this vein. So what happened surprised me -this broad and splendid movement of solidarity with Poland, of solidarity with Solidarity, of aid for western reactions to the "state of war" in Poland, he made a quite surprising reply: "Never in the last

'And western sanctions . . .? Even if sanctions were as economically damaging "as we read in Trybuna Ludu", he replied, "the responsibility for these sanctions lies with this (the Polish) government....

"As for Polish public opinion, the matter is simple; these sanctions were generally regarded as an act of solidarity with the Polish people... and if they were so conceived by western leaders, then they have fulfilled their role the whole time. It seems to me that I have to thank the policy of sanctions, among other things, for the fact that we can talk here today, that I'm sitting here in my flat and not in jail. For this defence of my colleagues and royself.
I should like to offer my warmest thanks to all our defenders."

Amazingly, while in prison Adam Michnik managed to write no fewer than three books - and to smuggle them out to his publishers underground and in the West: "This only goes to show that there is no place under the sun where someone with a really bad character can't get by", be commented wryly.

What are his personal plans now? "I would like to be useful - useful today, in a situation which I bope requires different kinds of people, including those who are not politicians but men of letters, men of reflection and protest ... In any case, prison has not brought me to the conviction that we should keep silent when confronted with murders. On the contrary, I emerged with the conviction that only open. plain speaking can save one man's life, and open the prison gates for another - as it did for me." So. characteristically, he ended up talking not about himself, but about his friends and colleagues, the Solidarity activists still in prison.

it has never been clear what a bishop. For some Anglicans this is conclusion: God is essentially masculine in his dealings with humans, for he always takes the identity, such as in his view would follow from ordaining women, would therefore undermine religion All that can be said for sure is that society is not yet by any means

> England on an even keel. It is not a pretty prospect; and what many uncommitted synod members will be asking themselves this week is whether the cause of "justice for women" is worth such

Approximately one third of the active core of the Church of England - the clergy and the one and a quarter million weekly churchgoers - is actively opposed to ordaining women, and this proportion is fairly accurately reflected in the synod's membership. This happens to be exactly the proportion of the vote necessary to block the legislation, not this Thursday but when the details come back for further debate. So in the end, nothing will happen.

The supporters of women's ordination need to take a very long view, and to regard such occasions Bishop of London on the nature of God find it irresistible. And they hold over the synod the ultimate threat a split

A large part of the Anglo-Catholic party would prob-ably take itself elsewhere, to found an independent church, or to join the Roman Catholic or Orthodox churches. copies of it in advance of publication, in case the news leaks out before publication day. However, if you will sign this undertaking that no mention of the book will appear anywhere in The Times before publication, and if you send a cheque for £1,000, we can arrange to a brown-paper parcel by armoured car two days before publication." The correct answer to this form of hype is unprintable in a family

Hype is a nasty, huckstering, PR. activity, to be firmly resisted by all good literary editors; who must also not allow themselves to be prejudiced against a book by the antics of its publicists. But it is an interesting word. In the publishing world it means a publicity stunt, usually disingenuous if not downright dishonest, intended to stimulate sales. As a transitive verb, to hype means to stimulate sales by brownpaper parcels, bribes, grotesque miniature "prezzies" connected with the subject of the book, freebies, and all other such uncleanness. Angela Carter, reviewing filmstars' "autobiographies" in New Society: "Most PR hypes are crass, and the Poor Little Rich Girl hype is the crassest of the lot."

The meaning of hype in publishing is pretty well established, though will continue to acquire new connotations such as brown-paper, because the industry is rich with ingenious publicists. Its origins are mysterious, and clearly transatlantic. The best bet is that it is an abbreviated form of hypodermic, to indicate a hypodermic injection of a narcotic drug. A hype is an obsolete term from the 1950s for a regular user of heroin. An alternative derivation from hyper, as in hypermarket, I find less persuasive. The earliest citations in the OED are from 1926, meaning a short-change artist, or, as a verb, to overcharge. These definitions cast some doubt on the etymology deriving hype from hypodermic.

Whatever the origin, hype came in, in its modern usage in the 1930s in the United States, among students, in the advertising industry, and in those great hype-factories of Hollywood and Madison Avenue. I wonder if the origin could be nothing more complicated than hyperbole. Hypodermic or hyperbole, the rest of us should treat hype coldly and with pursed lips.

Sorry, this won't work either

Northern national aspirations – the British identity of the majority unionists, and the Irish identity of the minority nationalists – cannot be resolved by altering a line on the map or declaring that the aspirations of one community should be realized at the xpense of the other. Peace and stability can be achieved only by the two communities agreeing to partici-pate in institutions which allow them to work together without compromising their ultimate aims.

Recognition of this fundamental truth lies at the heart of the proposal, aired with increasing frequency as the Thatcher-Fitz-Gerald summit approaches, that Northern Ireland be governed through the "joint authority" of the governments of the United King-dom and the Irish Republic, It was endorsed by the New Ireland Forum and, in a different form, by the recently published report of a private and independent inquiry. chaired by Lord Kilbrandon, But joint authority is too flimsy a concept to sustain the weight put upon it. When examined, its utility collapses.

Joint authority, according to a Forum sub-committee, "is the equal sharing of responsibility and authority for all aspects of the government of Northern Ireland by the governments of Great Britain and Ireland". (My italics). Clearly any such interpretation would be anathema not only to the unionists but also to the British government, which could not possibly accept an "equal sharing of responsibility and authority" on foreign policy and defence with the Irish Republic, which is committed to neutrality. Further, this interpretation of joint authority violates the spirit if not the letter of the British government's commitment not to permit any change in the constitutional status of Northern Ireland without the consent of the majority of its people.

Under the Kilbrandon proposals, oint authority would apply only to Northern Ireland's domestic affairs - those matters suitable for devol-ution. The authority itself would be a five-man executive, operating by majority vote and consisting of the Secretary of State for Northern ireland (or his deputy), the Repub-lic's Minister for Foreign Affairs (or his deputy) and three Northern Ireland representatives, directly elected by proportional representation so as to guarantee one representative from the minority community. The authority would be responsible to the Northern Ireland Assembly, which would become the legislature of a devolved government in the province.

One's first reaction to this scheme is bound to be that it is ingenious but unworkable, a Heath Robinson contraption designed to reconcile the irreconcilable. The constitutional purist might object that it is hardly possible for the Northern Ireland Secretary and the Irish Foreign Minister to be responsible to the Northern Ireland Assembly when they are in fact responsible to Commons and Dail respectively.

But there are more serious objections. For under the guise of providing for power sharing, the ilbrandon scheme could actually deprive the people of Northern Ireland of effective responsibility for their own affairs and make the British government the arbiter of domestic disputes in the province.

As the Kilbrandon inquiry recognizes, only two coalitions are likely to be formed within the authority. Either British and unionist votes would outweigh the Irish and the nationalist; or the British, acting with the Irish and the nationalist member, would outvote the unionists. The first coalition would do nothing to assuage minority grievances, and could well increase pressures for a united Ireland; the second would allow the province to be governed against the wishes of the majority living in it.

It might help to resolve minority grievances, but only at the cost of inviting as guarantor what the unionists would see as an outside protector, the Irish Republic. That would increase unionist fears that the government of the province was being transferred piece by piece to the Republic and that the constitutional requirement of consent was being circum vented.

In either case, the evils of the province would be blamed on the British government, whose vote would be pivotal. So the vast complexities of the Kilbrandon scheme would serve merely to replicate direct rule, a form of government which has produced a political vacuum in Northern Ireland to the benefit of elements opposed to reconciliation between the two communities.

The truth is that joint authority. however ingeniously it is claborated, is fundamentally a form of colonial or semi-colonial rule. It treats Northern Ireland as a dependency incapable of self-government, but what the province so desperately needs are institutions which enable both communities to participate together in government. One reason the unionists are unwilling to concede this is the fear that the nationalists would abuse it by seeking to pressure the majority into a united ireland. Joint authority, far from showing that fear to be illusory, would serve to reinforce it.

The realities of the Northern Ireland situation cannot be conjured away by "joint authority". In Northern Ireland, above all, it is dangerous to attempt to square the

Why not a bricks and mortar board?

Much in vogue in the posh Sunday papers of the 1960s, the phrase was a comfortable explanation of why, after 20 years of rising prosperity and universal secondary education, class differences were still so marked. The middle classes, farsighted and optimistic, so the theory went, were prepared to go without to see their children through higher education, in expectation of greater future reward; whereas the working class, myopic and less confident, placed a higher value on ready money and encouraged their chil-dren to earn as soon as they legally could. On reflection, deferred gratification, heard afresh, sounds like a character out of Asterix - a sharp-eyed, upwardly-mobile Romanized Briton cannily investing his all in Latin tuition for his sons.

But the term sounds a little jaded today. For the young, any gratifi-cation has to be deferred and there will not be much of it. In a recent BBC television programme about the Youth Training Scheme in which I took part, the main grievance of the young people involved was not the money (though they certainly were not too happy with that) but the lack of either job prospects or genuine qualifications when they had finished their twelve months.

There is cant and hypocricy on both sides about YTS. Not all schemes are bad, as Labour alleges in fact a few are very good indeed -and the idea that British 16 and 17 vear-olds, unlike those in far more prosperous countries, have an inalienable right to near-adult wages is silly. But to claim, as the Tories repeatedly do, that the scheme is the most comprehensive and imaginative in Europe is defensive boastfulness of the most embarrassing sort. In far too many cases, young people are being used as substitute labour unsupervised, untrained, and thrown back on the dole without ceremony at the end of the year. In these circumstances they are right to feel cheated. But listening closely to what those young people were saying, I find that "gratification" - with its implication that economic calculation is the basis of all motivation — is the wrong word. What they wanted above all was recognition — some sort of formal acknowledgement of their status in society, as adults and as potential earners. The employed have such a status; students, in a different way, do too. YTS trainees, unfortunately, feel they do not. Often, and this is the saddest thing, they pretend to their friends that they have a "proper job" and not a trainee placement at all.

As originally intended YTS was to have been for all 16-year-old school leavers, employed and unemployed. with the training element common to both. This has not happened

Remember deferred gratification? Perhaps, if it had, more progress would have been made towards relating the training to a recognized national qualification. High-powered working parties have been stumbling over one another devising new qualifications for the other half of the age group - that luckier half still in full-time education. The acronyms - TVEI, CPVE, AS - fall trippingly off ministers' tongues and reverberate around the educational conferences. No such thought is given to the qualification needs of YTS trainees.

The big class divide in future will not be between those who opt for deferred as opposed to instant gratification; it will be between those whose training and experience "count" as a qualification, and those whose training and experience do not. I owe this insight to an important book published last week, Post-Education Society. by Norman Evans. The author, a senior fellow of the Policy Studies Institute, has devised ways in which "experiential learning" - that is, learning derived not through the formal education system, but from experience - can be converted into academic qualifi-

We are not good at recognizing what people can do. The education and training system, which should be helping, often does the opposite. The school examination system works through failure, the higher education system through exclusion, and what is left of the traditional apprenticeship system through rigid time-serving practices, The overall effect is to convince the majority that they are stupider, less competent and more ignorant than they

Meanwhile, all around us, the new technologies of fibre, chip and satellite are developing both the techniques of individualized learn-ing and the time and the need to earn. The well-paid jobs and positions of influence would continue to go 10 those with the conventional educational background and the correct certificates, while another class of people who, with access to television and cheap home computers, might have picked up a fair amount of useful knowledge and expertise, will find their competence uncertificated, and no passport to anything. EMBEZZLED AID

Arguments about foreign aid always seem to generate more heat than light and today's reception of the Chancellor's likely cut in the aid budget will be no exception. In fact the crisis in Ethiopia provides an object lesson in the false premises and false practices of so much aid policy, which should not be overlooked simply because emotions have been aroused by the spectacle of so much human

Dr Charles Elliott formerly of Christian Aid, would like us to believe that the West is responsible for the Ethiopian famine. How right he is, though for reasons which are diametrically opposite to those which he puts forward. The Elliott argument contends that the Marxist regime in Addis Ababa has been deprived of funds from the West because of its Soviet orientation, and has thus not been able to develop the areas which are now

The facts tell a different story, though they lead to the same conclusion of Western culpability. Between 1978 and 1982, the Ethiopian regime received one billion dollars of Western aid. What happened to the money, most of which was channelled through multi-lateral agencies which are not explicitly accountable to anybody and which, as we heard last week, tend to squabble among themselves about disbursements and whose main effect is to bolster recipient regimes, many of which are dictatorships, regardless of their internal policies?

One look at the records suggests that Western aid has helped the Ethiopian regime to finance its civil wars; or/and perhaps finance the absurd and extravagantly pretentious main-tenance of the OAU whose potentates are gathering in Addis today while the rest of the world is struggling to save Ethiopian citizens from the follies and iniquities of their government. Certainly Western aid has enabled the regime in Addis Ababa to pursue policies which, without such help, would have brought it down much more quickly and misery.

We have seen only too vividly that a billion dollars have not been used to pursue agricultural, social or economic policies which could have equipped the rural population far more effec-tively to cope with the drought. A billion dollars has provided the regime with foreign exchange, perhaps to help pay for Soviet tanks to use on its citizens and certainly to sustain conscription. It has helped the Dergue to suppress policies of private trade in favour of public monopoly; to expropriate assets, particularly American ones; to expel unpopular groups to cause major refugee problems in the Sudan.

The aid policy of the West has played into the hands of rulers such as Colonel Mengistu whose politburo now quite naturally reasserts its role as the organizer and distributor for foreign assistance. If Western aid agencies persist in giving money to rulers on the basis of the poverty of their subjects, that means that policies which persistently cause the impoverishment of local populations will in effect be rewarded though the rewards may only be visible in the amount of weapons bought or in the life style of officials in the capital. In that sense therefore Dr Elliott was right to blame the West for helping to disable Ethiopian peasants from meeting the challenge of drought, because it supported a regime whose active measures of oppression, large scale evictions and prevention of peasant agriculture have all contributed as much to this catastrophe as have the years of drought What is more perplexing is that the charitable relief agencies seem to have made so little of this themselves. To listen to Dr Elliott one would not gather that the regime for which he feels so concerned has destroyed 70 per cent of Ethiopian churches (and Cardinal Hume in his BBC interview yesterday was surprisingly silent about this matter too, preferring the interview to be given over entirely to sentiment without any attempt to put this chronic African condition into saved Ethiopians from so much some kind of perspective). The Christian charities might argue that they have kept quiet about Ethiopian oppression for fear of being prevented from doing any good. In fact they have themselves become so politicized on the side of so-called "revolutionary development economics" that their demands for increased Western aid now have a hollow ring about them. When War On Want launched its campaign against world poverty, for instance, it started with a statement from its then General Secretary which asserted that poverty was explicitly linked to Western policies of development aid and imperialism. Its current General Secretary, George Galloway, is of the same view, on the far left of the Labour party and hoping for a parliamentary seat in Scotland. The enormous demands of Ethiopian relief command automatic support across the political spectrum, though it is incongruous that those who call loudest for Britain to go into Ethiopia unilaterally and increase its direct aid are normally those who would decry unilateral intervention in the affairs of other states - however humanitarian the causes - and would certainly favour an emphasis on multilateral rather than bi-lateral aid flows. In a crisis they demand direct action from Britain and receive it but they do not yet seem to absorb the full implications of that procedure, which would be to accept that multilateral aid is misemployed and incapable of effective action.

It will thus be regrettable if the Chancellor today announces a cut in the proportion of foreign aid which is directly paid from Britain rather than those funds which filter through multilateral agencies. Western aid agencies are culpable for what has occurred in Ethiopia. Their culpability should cause Britain to review its aid policies and to concentrate most of foreign aid on bi-lateral programmes where parliament can scrutinize them more carefully and see that the funds are not being embezzled in the cause of dictatorship or otherwise abused.

Like Watergate, West Germany's

The strengths of West German

The nub of the affair is the charge that the mammoth Flick concern bribed leading politicians, albeit indirectly, by contributions to party funds, in order to secure a quarter of a billion pound tax exemption. This charge should eventually be tested in court, with Count Otto Lambsdorff, the former Economics Minister, among those in the dock.

A wider implication concerns the way in which big business contributions to the funds of all the established political parties were "laundered" in order to avoid, or perhaps evade, the taxes otherwise payable on such donations. The fact that these donations were sometimes made personally - cash in plain envelopes - to leading politic-ians, including Chancellor Helmut Kohl, raises even larger questions about the prevailing mores of West German politics. What did Herr Eberhard von Brauchitsch, the former managing director of the Flick concern. mean when he described these payments in private memoranda as "outfitting the gentlemen in Bonn"? Herr Rainer Barzel, as to this, as to every previous crisis president of the Bundestag the second ranking man in the Federal Republic, has already been engulfed by the scandal.

Colonel Gaddafi is quite cynical in his attempt to manipulate the humanitarian feelings of the British public to obtain the release of his agents who face trial for acts of violence in this country. Having equipped himself with six British hostages at the time of the break in relations last April, he released two of them in September as a "gesture", hinting strongly that Britain should reciprocate with a similar "gesture". Since that has to order such an act would be not worked, he has now brought able to tell its hit-men to serious charges against two of the disregard any risk of capture and remaining British prisoners, reminding us that he can "reciprocate" the approaching trial of his agents and, of course, any sentence that may be passed on them should they be found

Cynical the Colonel certainly is, but also naive. He should know that while we do indeed very much dislike seeing our fellow-citizens treated in this way, precisely for that reason Britain is never going to yield to such pressure. As Mr Douglas Hurd, then Minister of State in the Foreign and Commonwealth include the vigour of the civil servants, who first uncovered the wrongdoing the energy of the free press which (as with Watergate) has confounded the government's attempted cover-up; and last but not least the integrity of those parliamentarians who have helped to expose the scandal. The weaknesses have lain so far mainly with the Christian Democrats and Free Democrats who currently form the government of the Federal Republic. To be sure, the record of the Social Democrats, who were actually in power when the Flick tax exemption was granted, is far from spotless. But it was the Christian and Free Democrats who tried to push through an amnesty earlier this year and it was the Greens and upright Social Democrats who defeated

Chancellor Kohl himself came through a parliamentary hearing last week relatively unscathed, partly because the Bundestag committee's terms of reference confine it to the specific issue of the Flick tax waiver. Office, said in the House of Commons on July 4 1980, "if it became known that the Government was willing to hand over people convicted in British courts of terrorist offences the dangers facing British subjects travelling abroad would be greatly increased". So, he might have added, would the dangers of more state-sponsored terrorist acts being committed in Britain. Any government which wished prosecution in Britain, since it would easily obtain their release simply by arresting any passing British subject and threatening to maltreat him and/or sentence him to life imprisonment.

Mr Hurd was referring to a suggestion that Mr Christopher Sparkes, a British businessman who had been sentenced to life imprisonment in Iraq for bribery and economic espionage, should be exchanged for Salem Ahmad Hassan, who is serving a life sentence in Britain for murdering an exiled Iraqi politician in 1978. Mr Sparkes was subsequently released "on humani-both morally and politically inadequate.

It is morally inadequate because the Chancellor of the Federal Republic has a duty to reassure its citizens that they, not the captains of West German industry, decide what kind of government they should have. It is politically inadequate because the leader of the Christian Democratic Union must want to keep his party in power and the evidence of local government elections in Baden-Württemberg suggests that it is losing votes because of the Flick affair. In the longer term, the Kohl government has done the right and sensible thing by changing the law on the financing of political parties so devious "laundering" of donations from industry should no longer be necessary. But what is needed in the short term is a much clearer statement of regret and concern about the implications of the scandal. This week's Bundestag debate on the subject will provide a good occasion. Chancellor Kohl can no longer just ride out the storm. If he were to carry on ignoring the gale warnings of the press, the polls and his own party, he might find himself in the predicament of Mr Chay Blyth off Cape Horn.

tarian grounds", but two other British subjects, Mr John Smith and Mr Donald Hagger, are still serving life sentences in Iraq. Mr Smith was convicted of bribery by an Iraqi "revolutionary court" in 1980, Mr Hagger of espionage in 1982, but in May this year Iraq's First Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Taha Yasin Ramadan, said explicitly and publicly that they would not be released before Salem Ahmad Hassan_

Shortly before that the Iraqi foreign minister, Mr Tariq Aziz, had complained in an interview with The Times of a lack of sympathy towards Iraq in the British media, but would not accept that this could have anything to do with the imprisonment of Mr Smith and Mr Hagger. LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

US involvement in Nicaragua

From Lord Kennet . . . Sir, John Carlin's article about Nicaragua ("Kids who just won't grow up", November 8) and your own more judicious leader the next day do not give a very true impression.

Nicaragnans are "grown up" They have been four times invaded and occupied by the US; in the 1850s, in 1909, 1912-25 and 1927-33. After the last, the US Marines left behind them the Somoza dynasty of dictators, certainly among the nastiest in Latin American history. They are anxious to avoid a fifth occupation.

The revolution of 1979, which got rid of the last and worst Somoza, cost about 50,000 lives; the equivalent of one million to this country. Since 1981 the US has been financing and arming guerillas, some Somocistas, some not, based in Honduras and Costa Rica; they try to capture Nicaragnan territory, and they destroy foodstocks to disrupt the economy. They are supplied by air-drops from Honduras. The loss of life is now about a thousand a year, equivalent to 20,000 for Britain,

As to those MiGs. The Nicaraguan Air Force at present has three jet fighters, which went through the Korean war. The Honduran Air Force has had twelve modern jets for some years. It got eight more this year and has eight more again on order. The US Air Force is in Honduras and trains with them. The US Army is in Honduras, and has carried out there the biggest exercises in Latin American history. The US has mined Nicaraguan harbours. Much of this is in despite of the US Congress, and indeed of world opinion.

If Nicaragua has turned to Cuba and Russia in the last three years, it is because they have no-one else to turn to. Western Europe has been timid with political support and the EEC has cut its economic aid from $80m in 1979 to $22m this year.

Given all this, can the West be surprised that Nicaragua has re-quested from the East what it was refused by the West? The question the US Administration should now ask is whether its own policy in the last three years has not created the situation it deplores.

The way to peace in this area, as in others, is for any country which is attacking another country to stop doing so.

Yours etc. WAYLAND KENNET, House of Lords, November 9.

Shoes for growing . . . From Mr N. R. Wilkins

Sir, Children's footwear has recently been strongly rumoured as a candidate for VAT. Whilst such a move in other cases may have painful financial consequences for the consumer, the serious con-children's footwear cannot be overstated. The question of a link between footwear prices and foot health is not a new one. In May 1972 the then Chancellor of the Exchequer commissioned the Munro committee to consider "to what extent the price of children's footwear contributes to the incidence of foot abnormalities".

The committee concluded "that the price of children's footwear is an important factor in the context of foot abnormalities... there is a need to keep children's footwear as cheap as possible".

As a result the Chancellor continued the previous exemption from purchase tax by zero-rating for VAT purposes certain children's shoes.

All the evidence produced since then has added weight to these conclusions.

The Children's Foot Health Register contains the names and addresses of shops pledged to carry adequate stocks of children's shoes in all fittings and to fit them correctly at the time of sale. We exist solely to help in the battle to maintain and improve children's foot health. This battle will be in vain if the Chancellor now ignores the findings of the Munro commille.

Yours faithfully. NORMAN WILKINS, Administrator, Children's Foot Health Register, 84-88 Great Eastern Street, EC2. November 7.

... boots for yomping

From Mr P. C. Metcalfe Sir, I suspect that Army-issue boots are not what they were (Mr Lord's letter, November 7). In October, 1979, rummaging through the undergrowth in Mametz Wood, on the Somme, I found a complete Army boot. It was (and is) still in one piece, though the stitching had rotted. The nails and studs were intact.

It had lain in that haunted wood for 63 years: stamped inside was the date, 1916. Yours faithfully, P. C. METCALFE, 44 Sandown Road, Stevenage, Hertfordshire.

Out-of-town shopping

From Dr I. C. Hilton

Sir, The local authorities of southern England will not need Mr Nicholas Baker's "grim warning" (October 5) to be aware of the aspirations of our major retailers. But the successful shopkeeper is the one who gives greatest satisfaction to the customer, and there is no easy way of weighing the impact of out-of-town development and its traffic against shoppers' interests.

Tesco, in drawing attention to the parking in town, say no more than which the retailers require.

Time to clinch Law of the Sea pact?

From the Director of the British interference of nearby coastal states Maritime League Sir, The United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea closes for signature on December 9. The United Kingdom is one of very few countries that have so far delayed signing, though the United States has declared that it will not sign because it objects only to part XI (out of XVII) dealing with what remains of "the common heritage of mankind" - "The Area" defined as the seabed and ocean floor and subsoil thereof beyond the limits of national jurisdiction," i.e., more than 200 nautical miles from any state's coastal baselines. The area is principally of interest for the poly-metallic nodules that proliferate over major parts of the deep seabed; these are unlikely to be of much economic importance for 25 to 30 years or more, but the United States have enacted their Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act 1980 (PL 96-283) by which they propose to provide a number of United States-led seabed mining consortia with national licences that are presumably ex-pected to be protected in inter-national waters by the United States Government against the jurisdiction claimed by the vast majority of the United Nations community of nations that adhere to the new Convention.

Although untrue, the United States does not consider itself a maritime nation. But by no stretch of the imgaination can this be said of the United Kingdom, which is totally dependent on seaborne trade, with its vital merchant fleet, London as the world maritime centre, and the world's third largest Navy.

We have a substantial offshore industry and important fishing fleets, worldwide submarine cable responsibilities, major research and hydrographic interests. International shipping (and aviation) require freedom of navigation, security against piracy and the arbitrary or hostile warships.

The United Nations Convention codifies for the first time virtually every facet of maritime law in a period when the world community is extending its use, jurisdiction and authority over the 72 per cent of the carth's surface covered by seawater. Non-contracting parties may seek to rely on current customary law and hope that this will absorb most of those parts of the Convention that they accept. But there is no certainty

Other major countries that have signed no doubt feel that they can live with the deep seabed provisions if and when they are implemented. or that they can work to improve them as signatories, in a way that would be impossible from outside. the treaty.

Shipping will always be far more important to the world economy than the resources of the deep seabed. In the absence of the old "Pax Britannica," or any "Pax Americana" to replace it, an internationally-accepted rule of law will have immense benefits to every maritime state, not least by facilitating the elimination of sub-standard ships and the protection of the environment by improved inter-national standards and better behaviour at sea.

Britain and remaining doubters in the Community should certainly sign now and not follow President Reagan's ill-considered refusal to do so for most doubtful reasons; any marginal electoral benefits to him of satisfying the mining industry have no relevance to Europe.

The rest of the Convention is far too important for us to seek to ignore what we did so much to draft to suit our own principal interests. Yours faithfully,

MICHAEL RANKEN, Director, The British Maritime League, 19 Bevis Marks, EC3. November 5.

The voice of faith

From the Reverend Ian M. Ellis Sir, In his article today (November 5) Mr Clifford Longley declares, on the subject of Prayer Book revision, that the best modern English is "still unavoidably inappropriate" and describes the Church of Ireland's new Alternative Prayer Book as containing "just the same blend of the banal and the synthetically archaic that marks the Church of England's new book".

If this revision is so inappropriate, why is it, one might ask, that the demand for copies of the APB has been such as to exhaust supplies and warrant an immediate reprint? Again, why is it that there has been such a worldwide involvement in the revision of forms of worship? Yet again, why is it that the Bible, as well as the Prayer Book, has been so widely revised and so widely used in its revised forms?

'Re-structured' rugby

From Mr J. Parsons Sir, Remarkable physical fitness and extraordinary commitment appear to be two of the more admirable features of the contemporary Rugby Union game. I therefore find it hard to accept the proposition examined in David Miller's article (Spectrum, October 31) that "re-structuring" is likely to be the re-vitalizing influ-ence which English rugby at international level so sorely needs.

Jim Telfer is surely nearer the mark when he states that it is "faults among the backs" - by which I assume he means primarily weaknesses in the basic skills - which need to be eradicated. In the years leading up to the Second World War, one remembers, amongst the English backs, not only the national talents, but also the excellent skills of T. A. Kemp (Denstone), P. Cranmer and P. Cooke (St Edward's, Oxford), P. L. Candler (Sherborne) and G. W.

Parker (Crypt School, Gloucester). What has happened to the public schools' contributions which was so important to the game in those days? Would former rugby-playing members of the Headmasters' Conference explain to those of us who are puzzled and disappointed? Yours faithfully,

I. PARSONS, Catesby Farm House, Lapworth, Warwickshire.

Harnessing the Severn

From Professor E. M. Wilson Sir. The comments of Mr Andrew Lea, of the Avon Wildlife Trust (October 31), about the effects of a Severn barrage on the environment are so grossly exaggerated as to be easily refuted. For example, a Severn barrage at Lavernock Point Brean Down would pass about half a cubic mile of seawater into and out of the reservoir twice daily. This is hardly the specification for a "festering brackish lake".

Any serious student of the environmental impact of a barrage would be well advised to read the Department of Energy's Energy Paper 46, Tidal power from the Severn Estuary, Vol 2, before taking Mr Lea's assertions at face value. However, his letter does raise the whole question of how far the protection of the status quo for some their household-name competitors have been repeating and, we must assume, acting on for years.

The prosperous South, where population and household expenditure are rising, has it easy. Places in relative or absolute decline are seeing a loss of quality and range of goods and have many shops vacant.

Some possess an excess of shopping floorspace but want up-today facilities and the stimulus and the environmental gains which new development would bring. Yet developers cannot justify and local authorities are unable to afford the difficulties faced by the shopper amount and types of parking space greater and when, as the outery over Ethiopia clearly demonstrates, British public opinion is clamouring for more aid, not less. Any cut at all, even if less than £160m, would be a disgrace. We hope that if the reports are true, the Minister will have the courage to resign. Yours faithfully, CHARLES ELLIOTT. JOHN CLARK, ADRIAN P. HEWETT, SIMON MAXWELL, PAUL MOSELEY, 119 Fentiman Road, SW8.

NCB's chairman

From Mr R. J. C. Roeber

Sir. If Mr MacGregor is sacked, ousted, or eased from the chairmanship of the NCB it will not be because he was incompetent. On the contrary, it will be because he did the job he was appointed to do. The problem is that it was the wrong job. A world-class businessman was not needed to identify loss-making pits; the candidates have been known for years and any child could look down the list and choose the place to start cutting. But there was a need for a subtle and sensitive manager of men with the right instincts for industrial relations

I find it frightening that we have a Government that know so so little about their business and are so overborne by a zeal to crush the unions that they can make an appointment of this sort, Mr MacGregor is not to be blamed for the NCB's incompetence in dealing with the issue of pit closures. The responsibility belongs to the Government that appointed him. I am, Sir, yours faithfully, R. J. C. ROEBER,

Conqueror's log From Mr John S. Wright

Royal possessive

From Mr Kenneth G. Braidwood Sir. The occasion of the Queen's gracious speech to the Lords and Commons today excellently recalls for all of us the majesty and longevity of our (unwritten) Constitution.

May we hope that by this recall the Queen's ministers will desist from the growing practice by which they demean the Constitution by referring to "my Government" and my Minister". Yours sincerely, among the "simple" himself. He has a fairly literal understanding of the doctrines of the Virgin Birth and the Resurrecton; he does not think they are myths".

It is also clear that the Church of England has some-thing of an authority problem. The Bishop of Durham is not in fact, answerable to anybody. and Anglicans are generally opposed to the idea of a central authority. It is not unknown for a Roman Catholic bishop in England to find a high Vatican official on the telephone within 24 hours of him being linked publicly with some controversy; and hitherto Anglicanism has felt rather superior to that way of behaving.

Ironically it is now the Evangelicals, traditionally the least inclined to favour any copying of the Roman Catholic Church, who are pressing for a firmer display of central auth-ority in the Church of Englad.

Dr Runcie's response, the only one possible, is to express his concern about the Bishop of Durham's controversial manner with gradually increasing volume and sharpness until the message gets through. To some extent the Arch-bishop of York, Dr John Habgood, shares Dr Runcie's view that controversial questions must be handled deli-cately. Their difficulty is that the Bishop of Durham believes, obviously, that delicacy equals evasion of the issues, which must be faced.

That at least unites him with his critics: they do not want him to be quiet, but to believe what they believe.

VALENTIN SOKOLOV

Mr Valentin Sokolov, the released after the 20th party Soviet poet who is reported to Congress in 1956, but arrested of 58, became well known for his poems in dissident circles both inside and outside the Soviet Union. Many of them were composed either in labour camps or in the psychiatric clinic in which he was forced to spend the last years of his life.

Sokolov was first arrested in 1947 and sentenced to 10 years in a labour camp for belonging to an "anti-Soviet" underground youth group. He was emigrés in Paris.

THE REV H. R. T. BRANDRETH

A Correspondent Writes: The Reverend Henry Brandreth, who died on October 31 made valuable contributions to the ecumenical movement and to the world of scholarship.

In 1939, at the request of the Church of England Council on Foreign Relations, he undertook to examine the complex subject of the episcopi vagantes, those self-styled bishops claiming to hold valid episcopal orders. The study was written for the benefit of the Lambeth Conference in 1948, his book Episcopi Vagantes and the Anglican Church having been published the previous year.

This book was an original and meticulous piece of sholarship and established itself as a classic. A revised edition was published in 1961 but was withdrawn almost as soon as it appeared due to threatened legal action. Brandreth was amazed as well as amused when he heard recently that copies of this second edition were selling for as much as £50 each.

His pioneer work, Unity and Reunion, was published in 1945. This annotated bibliography was a model of its kind, objective and detailed. The publication in 1974 of The Oecumenical Ideals of the Oxford Movement was followed in 1951 by Dr Lee of Lambeth, a work which paid close attention to Lee's part in The Order of Corporate Reunion and cognate schemes in the late nineteenth century.

Brandreth appointed Chaplain of St George's, Paris, in 1949 he found an ideal location, for St George's had a strategic and almost unique position as a meeting point between Anglican and other churches. At the suggestion of Dorothy L. Sayers, he wrote a life of J. K. Huysmans which was published in 1963.

Returning to England in 1965, he continued his close connexions with ecumenical groups and scholars, paying particular attention to Anglican Orthodox relations.

Over the years. Brandreth built up a fine working library and was always generous in assisting other scholars with information. He was delighted that Canon C. P. M. Jones was able to acquire for Pusey House. Oxford, his unrivalled collection of reunion pamphlets, bound in 108 volumes. The greater part of his library went to Pitts Theology Library. Emory University. Atlanta.

Brandreth sensed that the interest and encouragement previously shown in his work was no longer maintained after the retirement of Archbishop Ramsey. Over a period of time he became dispirited and ill health overtook him in the late 1970s until finally he eschewed all intellectual pursuits. It was a very great waste that through want of the right encouragement, his unrivalled knowledge of important, if arcane, aspects of English church history and of modern reunion matters was never fully utilized.

Sir Arthur Bryce Duncan, who died on November 2, was chairman of the Nature Conservancy from 1953-61, Convener of Dumfriesshire County Council and Lord Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire, 1967-69.

Opera in New York

Glass breaking out of 'minimalism'

Akhnaten

Lincoln Center

Philip Glass's Akhnoten has arrived in New York, at the New York City Opera in Lincoln Center, in a production which originated in October at the Houston Opera, For the first time in many years, the fitfully soporific state of contemporary American opera shows signs of life, because Glass has become the focal point of vigorous, heated argument as to the worth of his music and of his operatic pageants, with opinions ranging from "feeble" to "masterly", from "pretentious and boring" to "inspired and gripping". Certainly Glass is the most individual force in American opera since Virgil Thomson.

His "operas" so far have been more music-theatre pieces than traditional operatic works: Einstein on the Beach (a collaboration with Robert Wilson). Salyagraha (about Mahatma Gandhi's early career in South Africa) and now Akhaten. Satyagraha has been recorded, and will enter the City Opera repettory in 1986; a two-week run of Einstein is being given this Christmas at the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

opera since Virgil Thomson.

All three operas are bound together by the musical repetitious-ness for which Glass in either renowned or infamous, but Akhna-Celia Brayfield ten differs in that it uses a fuller orchestra (without violins) in a more Akhnaten, however, is a distance from traditional opera. It consists of a series of scenes, or tableaux vivants, portraying the life of the Pharoah Akhnaten, who worshipped the sun god, from his sunrise (the death of his father, and his coronation) to sunset (the destruction of his civilization), in three 45minute acts. The highest point is achieved at the noonday cantre, when Akhnaten sings the longest "aria" of the opera, his Hymn to the Sun. For the rest, there are brief ensembles and duets and some choral passages of length, but the burden falls on the orthestra and onstage pantomime, linked by spoken dialogue.

The repeated patterns of the music change harmonically, rhythmically in speed or in orthestration.

mically, in speed or in orchestration. and stretch over an extended timeframe. The patterns become a type of drone bass which serves to highlight the changes when they occur, Yet the deliberately mannered nature of the composition, which sounds extraordinarily simple when set against the complexities of twentieth-century composition, is in fact cunningly wrought. Akhnoten shows Glass in full control of his material, dramatic and musical,

Glass and his librettists (Shalom Goldman, Robert Israel and Robert Riddell) have chosen to emphasize the infantile, physiologically and tenor. David Freeman, who produced the work, depicted Akhnaten as a hermaphrodite, either clinging to his mother Tye, or his child-wife Nefertiti, or playing in the sand. The focus of the simple settings (by Israel and Riddell) is on the eternal and the immediate at once the everlasting Egypt of someone winnowing wheat, someone making mud bricks and a group of men fighting (all onstage for the whole of the opera), and the events of Akhazten's life. In the second act, when Akhaten banishes the priestly cult, establishes monotheism and begins contruction of his sun city, Freeman indicates the building by having Egyptians make sand houses across the stage. When the priests return to otherthrow Akhnaten they destroy the houses (as they in fact destroyed the city). This visual solution is brilliant in that it keeps the focus on a child's world of creation, with an adult's revenge.

child diminishes him as both religious figure and thinker, leaving him his one moment of mature glory in the Hymn to the Sun, which is the musical highlight of the opera and a composition of extended ecstatic stasis. (It recalls, in emotionality if not in musical means, several passages of ecstasy in Messiaen's Saint Francis opera.) At the end of the opera, after present-day tourists

The production, in its conscious naiveté, is radically different from that of Achim Freyer for the Stuttgart première last March, which was a painter's inventive and personal response.

As Akhnaten, Christopher Robson sang with glacial purity and acted with appropriate childlike incomprehension. The orchestra, under Christopher Keene, needed more sharpness in the attacks and overlaps, which are crucial, and needed to relax into the music.

Whatever one's response to Akhnaten, two things are clear. One is that Philip Glass has attracted an enormous amount of attention in the United States for his stage works, and has in the process broken out of the "minimalist" shell towards a personal style of opera. The second is that he intends to devote a major share of his time in the next year or two to opera, specifically to an adaptation of one of the space novels of Doris Lessing in collaboration with the author.

Dance Pauline Daniels

Riverside

Guest appearances with the Dutch National Ballet at the Coliseum last June introduced Pauline Daniels as a dancer of remarkable clarity and distinc-tive personality. Those qualities are revealed more extensively in the solo programme she gave at Riverside Studios for Dance Umbrella on Friday and Saturday. Under the title Profile, she performs four contrasted pieces, cach influenced by a different art form, which cumulatively make a satifying whole.

Hans van Manen's Portrait, to Satie piano music (the dance we saw before), begins the show With different parts of her muscular but very feminine body picked out by a follow-spot, she is revealed physically and emotionally as if in photographic close-up.

Then, with no longer pause than is needed for a quick costume change, she puts off that stern character for a frivolous, flirtatious girl in-volved in a relationship, at least partly imaginary, with a womanizing unseen hero. This dance, called Sonia and others, has a literary source, a text by the Belgian writer Kurt Köhler. read by an actor and theatrical producer, Tom Jansen, who devised and directed the dance.

Film photography pays a large part in Golspe, with choreography by Helga Langen (a fellow-member, with Daniels, of the group Dansproduktie). In this, Daniels plays a street urchin. She is seen both live on stage and recorded on a screen behind; at first only one or the other, but eventually both at once, the simultaneous appearances developing into a fight between her real and filmed selves, or even between two selves on film.

In the last dance, 13. Daniels's own choreography is set in relation to music produced by Harry de Wit from his "costrument", a grey plastic overall inside which contact microphones are sewn. His gestures cause various noises amplified by a special seat like an electric chair - but it is the dancer's body that is convulsed as if by electric charges. The result is eccentric and compel-

This year there are two. presiding themes: music-theatre and Peter Maxwell Davies. They are not necessarily synonymous. Indeed, it is not until later in the week that the Fires of London will be arriving with a double bill of staged pieces. However, in concerts covering almost the whole of his career, one has been reminded time and again of how very theatrical his instrumental music often is: all those great percussion machines and heral-dic trumpets in the orchestral pieces, and the sense of a purely musical theatre of inexorable progress and deep seriousness. Possibly this is just another way of saying that his music is powerfully argued, as he was ready quite simply to admit in a talk on his orchestral works. Less easy to accept was the view he expressed that the three

Bach Choir/ Willcocks Festival Hall

With the prospect of a film of Amadeus looming on the horizon (reports from California suggest a confection of gargantuan proportions) to keep alive the controversy about Mozart's death, it is unlikely that his unfinished Requiem will lose either its fascination for scholars or its hold on the concert platform, where it seems currently to be every choral society's favourite.

Whether the piece will continue to be sung in Sussmayr's discredited completion, or in the more recent attempts by Richard Maunder (which Hogwood has recently recorded) or Duncan Druce (yet to be heard in London, I think) is more doubtful. For such massive sing-ins as Friday night's Bach Choir performance, Sussmayr - with his obiquitous trombones cheerily trolling along on the bass line — probably serves best, with a thickness of orchestration that complements the singing. Nevertheless, Sir David Will-

One is perhaps beginning to get drifting similarly overcome by a used to the idea that Hudders-field means contemporary music in Stone Litany or the colossal achievement of Worldes Blis, which at 40 minutes is only the mighty prelude to things that perhaps can never be said, even in music. Very little composed for the orchestra since Mahler's death disturbs and elates on this scale. Some apprenticeship!

> . Davies's real apprenticeship was represented rather by the Clarinet Sonata of 1956-57 which he wrote for himself and Birtwistle to play, but which had disappeared until unearthed for this performance by Kevin Corner and Russell Medley. It is in three short movements growing in style and substance out of the judgmental meditation of the Op 2 piano pieces: the second movement scampers off (or should scamper off) as a presio, and the finale is an adagio. Publication, and more performances, would certainly not shame the composer. What happens to a work when it is performed often was shown by the Albany Brass Ensemble in an account of Davies's Brass Quintet that made thirty minutes pass like ten but contain as much as a hundred, so fiercely concentrating was their expert, virtuoso guidance. But the orchestral concert too was a rare experience, not only in being the first devoted to Davies but also in bringing out so much detail and in making the music work. In Stone Litany Elizabeth Parcells offered liquid cascades in the upper region, even if her lower voice was quiet, and the whole orchestra played this demand-ing but exhilarating programme as if they meant every bit of it.

It was an excellent idea to preface this Requiem with Haydn's all too rarely heard To Deum, a magnificient late work of 1799 or 1800 which - like the Mozart - uses plainsong, has an old-style fugue which reanimates the baroque tradition, and makes powerfully expressive use of the diminished seventh. Its hard edges wer softened by the choir's numbers, but the exultant counter point of "In te Domine speravi" counced happily, and the unison cries of "non confundar in acternum" were chillingly

Indeed. biographies were regarded as the last bastion of the hardback.

They have never done as well, comparatively, in paper-back, and a few years ago disappointed even Penguin with their much publicized series of the "best" modern biographies - reprints mainly. (Penguin, though, are not beaten: Emma Tennant is currently editing for them a series of "Lives of

As Peter Carson of Penguin and Allen Lane, now Viking, idds, it is increasingly difficult to come up with a first-rate biography of "many of the better subjects as a good or even very good biography of recent vintage exists".

Why do publishers go on bringing out biographies if most people who need to be written about have been written about? Last word to Peter Carson: "What is still true is that a goodish biography probably can command more review space than virtually any other cate-gory of book."

Autumn test of candour for the Chancellor

Perhaps if Mr Nigel Lawson could come up with a dignified new title for this afternoon's Autumn Statement - or gild it with a bit of best British ritual - the process might begin to look less like the conclusion to an ill-managed cabinet firework display and more like the production of his major economic statement of the year.

The Autumn Statement has grown only by degrees, almost by stealth, certainly against government opposition, with the inclusion of extra pieces of the jigsaw of public accounts. First, of course, come the expenditure figures; even a government dedicated to cutting taxes still bizarrely begins its sums on the spending side.

Even more bizarrely, these so-called expenditure plans embody plenty of decisions which are really about revenue: what to charge for certain public services, what to demand from (or lend to) nationalized industries, what rates and thresholds to fix for Britain's payroll tax, or national insurance scheme.

Secretive Treasury

All these decisions had already made the autumn spending round as financially important to many individuals as the Budget, even before considering the implications of the next major element in the Autumn Statement: the Treasury forecast. From its projections of output, inflation and so forth can be calculated the total revenue likely to be raised by the existing tax structure – and that figure, too, is now published. Since the permissible level of government borrowing is supposed to be pre-determined (by successive medium-term strategies), then, hey presto, we can deduce the Chancellor's scope for tax cuts next spring - now coyly presented in the Autumn Statement as a "fiscal adjustment".

Yet the Autumn Statement still does not tell all, particularly this year. The Treasury, having been forced (largely by Parliament) to open its books in the autumn, has quickly developed devious new defences for its privacy. It has an instinctive determination to husband the good news. Mr Lawson's first tax-cutting Budget last March, remember, was actually heralded by an Autumn Statement which said he would need to put taxes up. So whatever figure appears this afternoon, in place of the £2 billion originally pencilled in for tax cuts in 1985-86, is bound to change again before next

There are always real reasons for change behind which the Treasury can disguise its autumn caution. The forecast of the public sector's deficit - the figure that determines the need for borrowing and the scope for tax cuts - is the difference between two huge numbers. Small shifts in the total for either expenditure or revenue can easily double or destroy the Chancellor's horde of spare cash.

Take spending first. As stockbrokers Grieveson, Grant point out in a paper today, the present contingency reserve of £2.75 billion for 1983-84 amounts to over a third of the Government's target for public borrowing (which looks a healthy cent of planned public expenditure (which looks, and has proved, too narrow).

Of course, the Government can claim special reasons for its breach of this year's reserve. Roughly £1.5 billion (including lost revenue as well as higher spending) has been added to public borrowing by the miners' strike. Without that, the reserve would have just sufficed so far, though with no margin for the remaining one third of the financial year.

This overshooting has massively com-plicated next year. It is not only that, without foreknowledge of when the miners' strike will end, the Chancellor's forecast of 3 to 3½ per cent growth and 4 to 4½ per cent inflation must be more provisional than usual. It also squeezed the room for growth in public spending allowed for by next year's targets.

Even the "victories" over Mr Lawson claimed by spending departments last week allow for total cash budgets to rise by less than the rate of inflation, and at about half this year's rate.

Hence the suspicion of Mr Lawson's contingency figuring for 1985-86. The Treasury's practice has been to build in larger and larger reserves for the years futher ahead, implicitly allowing for some ground to be lost in successive Cabinet battle. But Mr Lawson cannot cut far into next year's reserve, originally set at £3.75 billion, without the City crying fudge. Which leaves him with apparently litle to offer in the way of tax cuts.

But this Chancellor, as we know, is not prepared to be so constrained. He has shown hmself ready to tax Peter in order to untax Paul. The whole tax system is up for consideration - whatever the Chancellor's margin for overall tax cuts, the Budget will be an occasion for substantial redistribution of the tax burden.

'Green Budget'

This could mean that this afternoon's Autumn Statement will actually be less informative than in previous years. Over time, the Treasury has been nudged in the direction of producing a credible "Green Budget" - an overall statement on public accounts, plus calculations of the costs of possible tax changes. For the past two years it has provided simple tables of the cost of altering the rates and threshholds of major taxes; quite sufficient to enable back-of-the-envelope would-be Budget-makers to play around with different ways of distributing the Chancellor's spare

With more radical change in prospect, more information is needed. A major test of this Autumn Statement will be whether the Chancellor is prepared to divulge more about his options, in line with his enlarged ambitions. If not, the Budget process will have taken a step back into obscurity, and at a dangerous moment. Before Mr Lawson launches radical reform, involving costly adjustments, on the taxpaying public, he owes us the material for properly informed debate.

Alliance and Leicester plan to merge by mid-1985

The Alliance and the Leicester building societies will today announce plans for the largest merger in building society history. If the merger is completed it will create the fourth largest society, to be called the Alliance and Leicester, with assets of about £6

Today's announcement will state that although there is no commitment between the two societies yet, talks have started which should lead to merger proposals. The societies hope that the merger will be effective around the middle of next year. Before the societies can link up, however, they must obtain a three-quarters majority in layour of the move from their shareholders. They also need the agreement of their respect-

Dollar in danger of 'precipitous fall'

The dollar could fall precipi- Business Programme last night tously unless US federal budget deficits are reduced quickly, according to Mr Martin Feld-stein, former chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers.

The ability of foreign inves tors to continue to absorb dollar securities is fast approaching saturation point. Capital in-flows into the US from the rest of the world are adding an estimated $100 billion to the US savings pool. Enough to finance more than half the deficit, but, writing in The Wall Street Journal, Mr Feldstein gives a warning that this cannot continue. Mr Donald Regan, the US Treasury Secretary, said in an interview with Channel 4's that defence and medicaire were prime targets in the Administration's determination to cut spending, and that taxes would be raised only "as a last resort".

But Mr Feldstein said that a stalemate this year could trigger a spontaneous fall in the dollar, requiring a rise in interest rates that would terminate the economic recovery.

That view is echoed by Lloyds Bank, which today forecasts a 12 per cent fall in the dollar's average value in the year to September 1985, and by the stockbrokers, Grieveson, Grant, who give a warning that delay could result in emergency action later on the budget

Continuing cuts in public of which civil engineering accounts for about 10 per cent, have fallen from a 1980 average of 1,325,000 to just over one million this summer.

The federation's October workload survey, covering 203 companies, reveals that 42 per cent have cut the number of operatives in the last 12 months and 36 per cent said they expected the employment trend be downward, with the burden falling mainly on companies employing fewer than 500.

says study By Graham Searjeant Financial Editor Competition from private companies should be inroduced into Britain's railways by treating them like airline routes, according to a study by Professor David Starkie in the atest issue of Economic Affairs. It would be better for British Rail and for the public if BR were split into two parts, instead of piecemeal sales of railway lines, Professor Starkie says in the journal, which is published on behalf of the Institute of Economic Affairs.

The tracks, signalling and control and stations, he says, would remain as a state-owned British Rail. But operations would be put into a separate company, perhaps called British Trains, which would compete with licensed private competitors to operate services, paying British Rail for the privilege, This would make the railways like airways, where state and private airlines are licensed to operate services over the same routes.

The transition could be relatively painless, Professor Starkie says, as privately-owned wagons aiready carry 40 per cent of BR freight traffic and the Venice-Simplon Orient Express company uses BR infrastructure. Loss-making routes should only have one operator, but there could be competition in tenders for subsidies, he says.

BARCLAYS DEVELOPMENT CAPITAL

Hope floats with P&O's Princess

The Princess of Wales will name P&O's new cruise ship, the Royal Princess on Thurs-day. The ship is the most expensive cruise ship ever built, at a cost of $150m (£118.7m). In keeping with its price, it is aimed at the top end of the world cruise market, on the West Coast of America.

After years of savage pruning of its traditional bulker and liner fleets, the purchase of the Royal Princess is a significant act for P&O. It represents an investment equivalent to a third of the group's total share-holders' funds.

The decision to invest on such a scale was taken by the previous top management team at P&O in 1981 on the basis that it was necessary to maintain the group's leading position in the market. Since then, the cruise markets have been hit by poor economic conditions and increased price

However, given the current buoyancy of the US economy, demand for cruises is good and divisional profits seem on target to recover to 1980 levels this vear. In this environment, there is little doubt that the Royal Princess will contribute well to group profits, particularly given its novelty appeal to the wealthy US cruise set.

Nevertheless, preciation and interest alone amounting to £15m a year P&O may have difficulties in generating an acceptable return on capital if economic conditions pressures intensify. To cope with such conditions, P&O will at least have the operational flexibility of already owning an established cruise fleet. The structure of the P&O fleet will have undergone a major transformation in 1984, reflecting not only the delivery of the Royal Princess, but also the £77m writedown of the gas fleet - which has produced only a minimal return on capital since P&O invested about £100m in nine LPG-carrying ships in the 1970s. In the last decade, the structure of P&O's capital investment in shipping (including its associate, OCL) has altered dramatically.

*Phillips & Drew estimate

Ships are still important in terms of P&O capital employed, accounting for 45 per cent of the total in the last annual accounts, but their contribution to group profits was only 8 per cent. This experience has been common to all the major British deep-sea shipping groups in the recent years and, not surprisingly, has strengthened the industry's determination to dipose of shipping interests.

P&O's move out of shipping with de- has progressed for about 10 years. Its major source of profit is now the construction group, Bovis, and it has a diverse and profitable range of other activities encompassing road haulage, turn down again or competitive banking and extensive overseas interests.

The stock market has wit-nessed P&O's profits recovery and chewed over endiess per-mutations of bid possibilities, but the other major deep sea shipping company. Ocean Transport & Trading, has remained under a cloud. Nige-

cludes interests in distribution, towage, air freight forwarding 100 100 100

However, like P&O, Ocean has also been restructuring, but without the blaze of publicity that attaches itself to a bid situation. Indeed, two of Ocean's actions in 1983 had the mark of genius. The first was the disposal of its Singaporebased subsidiary, Straits Steam-ship, for £88m. After a profits record of solid growth up to 1983, Straits has moved into loss. After demonstrating impeccable timing in its disposal, Ocean then went on to use the proceeds to repay the majority of its dollar debt, at an exchange dispose of London's waste with a barge service on the Thames. This division's earning potential goes a long way to justifying the value placed on the whole group by the stock market. High stakes have always been the nature of shipping business. P&O and Ocean both invested heavily in the gas carrier market in the 1970s and lost. Now the companies have adopted different strategies, with P&O substantially increasing its exposure to the cruise market while Ocean is content to become more dependent on its established land-based activi-Ocean share price stands on a 40 per cent discount to its

it Increasing gilt sales is a viable option, but not one which is especially appealing to the company sector. Increasing public sector asset sales are unlikely increased esset sales are unlikely increased estimates of well below present estimates of the corporate cash surplus and in any case every effort is being made to encourage individuals rather than incorporated bodies to take up privatization issues.

With sterling still at relatively low levels despite its recovery, it seems unlikely, at least for the moment, that companies will aim to increase significantly their stock of overseas assets. The most likely outcome, therefore, is that this excess liquidity will be spent either in the form of higher wages or, more optimistically, on higher investment.

The projected investment growth from most surveys is encouragingly high. But the recession of the early 1980s led to reductions in capacity in many companies which are now beneficiaries of this investment

The result is likely to be an excess demand for capital goods, which will lead to higher prices in some, but certainly not all, of the investment goods industries. The consequence is that in the absence of any acceleration in the public asset sales programme, the excess money creation to date risks promoting modest acceleration in inflation, even though this may not be reflected initially in the consumer goods sectors.

Taking all three conditions together, it does not yet appear certain that the next assault on the 10 per cent yield barrier will prove to be successful.

This has arrested the growth of the economy. It is now quite possible there will be negative growth early next year. This is not satisfactory to the Administration.

Pressure from the Administration is not the only pressure on Mr Paul Volcker, chairman of the Fed. In what appeared an orchestrated performance, a former vice-chairman of the Fed, Mr Fred Schults, now a consultant for Drexel Burnham Lambert, forecast that Mr Volcker would resign early next year to allow the terms of chairmen of the Fed to be synchronized with the terms of the president. Mr Volcker's denial of this ensured he would be able to manipulate his term of office Another source of pressure

This exposed the dilemma of the Fed. Further substantial expansion of reserves is needed where the cash flow of Compagnie Francaise de Raffinage was negative. Inventories being valued according to the FIFO method, a stock effect of 400 million francs was generated as a result of the rise in the dollar.

Gross investments for the first half amounted to 3,866 billion francs against 10,142 billion francs for 1983 as a whole. The share of the oil exploration and production sector was 2,543 billion francs in this half against 6,245 billion francs for all of 1983.

Results for the year as a whole must not be extrapolated from those of the first half. The decline in the oil market since the summer will certainly have an effect on earnings in the second half. Furthermore, the results of exchange transactions - practically nil at June 30 - are not easy to estimate, since they depend to a large extent on the parities of the principal currencies at the end of the financial year.

How often do your tenders for overseas contracts get beaten by foreign companies?

Worse, how often do foreign companies clinch a contract right here on your own doorstep?

You could be forgiven for thinking they have some sort of secret weapon.

Well, likely as not, they have. It's called energy management.

Applied properly, it can effectively control your energy costs. And contribute handsomely to profits.

Despite our poor showing between 1973-1982 illustrated above, thousands of British companies are proving it every day.

So could you. Your first step? Appointing an Energy Manager.

Someone directly responsible for all your company's energy use.

He can implement programmes to save you energy (and therefore, of course, money). Then help you monitor and control your performance.

With a grant from us, he could go on to engage a qualified consultant who'll devise energy-saving investments tailored to your precise needs.

Investments that will pay the consultant's fee many times over. And could cut your energy bill by tens of thousands of pounds a year. Ask your secretary to fill in the coupon.

It shouldn't be too long before you're shaking hands on some of those contracts.

Wimbledon, Queen's Club and Wembley, Lendl, competing at his best only when serving (nine Wembley for the first time, had aces). Gomez won the first not won a tournament since he point of the tie-break but then became French champion in lost 13 consecutive points – and Lendl's win over Connors in produced another example ~ there have been far too many of diffident, excessively tolerant conduct by an umpire and a supervisor, in this case Jeremy Shales and Ken Farrar, Under a modicum of provocation, Connors taunted Lendl in terms that could reasonably be con-strued as an invitation to stand up and fight.

The televised version of the incident suggested that the paternal response of the officials could almost be justified. But the edited BBC recording spared us an obscenity that should have earned Connors a warning and a fine, Lendl did ask the umpire to intervene. "I'm not exactly an angel on the court", Lendl said yesterday, "but I don't think anyone should get away with yelling obscenities."

Shales knows his players and the emotional stress under which they work. Doubtless he considered that firm intervention would merely make vention would merely make matters worse. But that was no excuse for failing to apply the rules. The whole affair, though trivial in itself, was bad for the game – because most of it was televised confirmation of the extent to which court conduct has been allowed to deteriorate.

Four in This was also the first time Led modestly suggested that it since 1980 that anyone other just menat the receiver had than Jimmy Comment the receiver had Hooper have done it to me.

In the first set, Lendl was at reacted like a pricked balloon. His concentration wandered the semi-final on Saturday and the confidence drained out of him. In the fourth game of the second set Gomez went back to work but by that time Lendl was playing too well for

In addition to his serving, Lendl was unusually impressive because of his speed about the court. Later he said he had often overrun the ball and, consequently, had hit it too close to his body. Since August he has taen off 15lb. His game has been sharpened, too, by his recent interest in playing doubles.

Yesterday Lendl and Gomez (nine days older) practised together, played the singles final, and then beat Payle Slozil and Tomas Smid 6-2, 6-2 in the doubles final, Lendl therefore won £40,640, Gomex £23,070. We already knew a lot about Lendl. But it has been pleasing to be reminded that Pancho Segura was not the beginning and end of Ecuador's tennis exports. Gomez, incidentally, prefers surfing - but cannot earn a living at it.

Forntunately for Wales, their defence was sound and the Scots almost played on to their sticks. In spite of having most of the play in the second half, it was extraordinary how oblivious to the spaces the two Scottish front runners were, and none of the others seemed to have the confidence to join them. Connors steals glory in defeat

If you want to become a lovable veteran tennis star, here are a few pointers to things to avoid. Do not behave with restraint and dignity. Do not politically leave things to the unpire. Do not treat a tirade of ill-tempered abuse with gracious contempt. Do not wipe out an almost established lovable veteran with a display of smeath and newerful display of superb and powerful temis, Ivan Lendl did all that at Wembley on Saturday, in his semi-final against Jimmy Counces. He did all that and was boord off the

TENNIS: AN AMERICAN MONOPOLY IS BROKEN AT WEMBLEY

Connors was out of sorts with himself and his game. He yelled at the crowd and the line judges, and he yelled at his opponent. He yelled himself into a right old state, so much so that he ruined his own nerve for the game and was rolled over, as the Leadl service came in at him with Garneresque ferocity. And yet Connors was cheered to the echo. The crowd loved Connors. He behaved badly, but had behaviour at tennis has ceased to shock. We are no more shocked by the tears-before-textime tantrums of a tennis

Barnes star than we are appalled by a footballer pinching a few yards at a throw-in. It's part of the game, Why else would the BBC show and reshow that clip of John McEuroe laying into the barley water during the Stockholm open.? No, Connors has become a lovable No, Comport has become a lovation scamp. An impish wit. He jibed at Lendi: "Don't give me the brave man stuff, buddy boy." Hardly Oscar Wilde, was it? Connors is about as impish as Borls Karloff. He doesn't impish as Boris Karloff. He doesn't like jokes as much as scoring a point. He may have lost a tennis match, but he won the crowd and went on to a second victory in the post-match press conference. Here his technique is to say nothing quotably dangerous, but to imply all kinds of nanghtiness with his eyes.

And he gets away with it, phoney charm and all. He gets away with it because his tennis can be so overwhelmingly lovely that we really do want him to be a lovely chap as well, so we can cheer him the more.

On the other band, there is something permanently mappealing about Lendl. Partly this is because of his incredible face. In repose, if you can call a press conference you can call a press conference repose, his face is minualle, compelling, extraordinary. On court, however, Lendl somehow looks like a gangling loony, the kind you dread will sit next to you on the Tube. He does not have the Conners talent for crowd pleasing. When Conners wastes time, he comes over as a bit of a lad. When Lendl does so, he looks like a petulant foreigner. The difference is that Lendl is a difference is that Lendl is a sportsman, while Connors is, to the point of nausea, a star, and on the way to becoming a lovable veteran.

On Saturday's showing, Lendl is now the better tennis player. He is nowhere near being lovable. But at least he is a lot further than Connors from heling a watern.

A fortune awaits Steffan Tangstad, of Norway, if he comes to Britain to defend his European heavyweight title against Frank Bruno, Mike Barrett, the London promoter, said on Saturday. But it would be surprising it, after the events in Las Vagan, that "fortune" were not now spent in bringing Larry Holmes, the International Boxing Federation champion, to this country for Bruno. If Brune did lift the European title, he would then be world ranked and all the more vulnerable, for he would be a target for others wanting his ranking. While he is waiting for a world title shot, his fane may have to endure mismatches of the kind we saw the other day at the Albert Hall to come the world want to endure mismatches. country for Bruno.

After stopping James "Bonecrasher" Smith in 12 rounds on Saturday, Holmes said that he would be happy to defend against Bruno for Slm, which is really not extortionate. It is not the sort of defeat.

Holmes's defence against Smith will have strengthened the view that the champion is beginning to lose his grip, though it would be best to remember that that was his first defence in a year. Holmes certainly looked slow and though his jab eventually split Smith's eyebrow and brought the content to an end, those fast left-right combinations were not there. offer that comes ever day.

At the next stoppage he consulted Mr Norling, who had raised his flag to indicate dangerous play by Australia, and awarded a penalty some 10 metres nearer the Australian posts and well the right of where the offence took place. The New Zealander said afterwards that he had not seen the incident clearly but had not seen the incident clearly but it did appear at the time as though he allowed his own judgment to be overruled. The penalty award was certainly correct; the placing of it equally incorrect.

Kiernan, who had not been far short with a first-half penalty from his own half, gleefully kicked the goal off an upright and then two more after a kind of stiff-arm tackle by Burke on Ringland and a late charge by Tuyman on Finn. This was a thrilling match on a beautiful day, although handling and passing errors left the speciacio with some unpolished edges. Derek Morgan, chairman of the England selectors, expressed his reservations afterwards: "The crowd will have gone home wanting to watch rugby again next weekend, which is a good thing. But here were some elementary mistakes, considering this was the top level of county rugby." He thought that both sets of forwards would have been "tossed aside" by a good Welsh club pack such as Cardiff or Pontypool. Admittedly, Gloucestershire were missing half their backbone, with quick dropout. But Old narrowed the gap to 16-15 with a penalty. The second half continued in the same breathless fashion and Yorkshire regained the lead after 10 minutes with a try by Underwood which was poorly contested by the Gloucestersire defence. Sustained pressure put Morley over in the corner from a pass by Teague, who later scored himself after a long counter attack.

Rafter, Gadd, Blakeway and Mills absent, but the residual resilience of Two late tries gave an unbalanced look to this seesaw match; Gloucestershire led by only 20-19 with five minutes left before winning by two goals, three tries, a coal and a penalty to two goals, a try and a penalty.

Finally, Knobbs steamed in ike a character from Starlight Express as Underwood unaccountably ambled in pursuit of a loose ball. Barnes converted this last try.

The home team achieved all this on the minimum of possession. France were a heavier team. Bishop also formed a smooth partnership with Davies. It was his chip ahead on the blind side of the maul which created the space for Davies to carry on and send Glasson over to score Wales's first try. Thorburn kicked two penalties.

one on either side of this score.

A pushover try, credited to Sanz and converted by Bianchi, might have given France a half-time lead, but Thorburo, with just one successful kick out of five, gave Wales a 13-12 lead at half-time.

Righthic recovered the lead after.

Bianchi recovered the lead after the interval with a try before Davies, with a superb break, created the opportunity for Morris to dive over. Then Thorburn counterattacked, chipped shead and gathered to send Jones in for a try. Thorburn converted one of these and added two further penalties before Andrieu, late in the game, scored a final try for the visitors.

Without a win in the first division since September, and still smarting from an acrimonious Milk Cup defeat at sunderland in midweek, they were in just the mood to snarl up the Londoners' smooth progress towards the top of the table.

Clemence, however, was having one of his days, as Davenport, Wigley and Hodge all learned. His defenders were grateful to see him in such form. Mabbutt, preferred to Hughton at left back, became increasingly discomfitted by Wigley's direct running, and Miller looked perilously nondernus at times.

manager rarely runs smoothly, but the 24 hours spanning Saturday and yesterday afternoon must rank among the most disruptive periods. On his journey back from Highbury to Istanbul, where England meet Turkey in a World Cup qualifying tie on Wednesday, Bobby Robson stumbled across one setback after another. His problems started at Arsenal's ground, after a game that was numbingly dull, largely lifeless and woefully short of anything but rugged commitment. Robson was as relieved as anyone when the 1-1 draw with Aston Villa was brought to a close, since all of his England representatives had seemingly avoided injury. More encouragingly, three of them had helped to break the tedium. Withe, typically, had flicked on a throw-in for Burch, an outsider as tar as Robson was concerned, to put Villa ahead after 10 minutes. Half an hour later, Mariner took advantage of the freedom that Anderson's header gave him to claim Arsenal's equalizer. Yet apart from Day's instinctive saves in rapid succession from Stewart Robson, the anonymous Woodcock and the even more colourless Nicholas near the end, there were scarcely any other events of note. While appreciating that it was not a game for spectators, Graham Turner thought that his central defenders. Evans and Ormsby, had crucially contained Mariner and Woodcock.

Indeed, comfortably so although it should be added that the service to the Arsenal forwards was far from adequate. Stewart Robson alone rose above the untidy, inaccurate mess for Arsenal and, because he has been suffering from leg injuries recently, was not named in any of the three England squads. That is just as well. Now he has damaged a

LORD JUSTICE SLADE said Saturday's results

Before Lord Justice Cumming-Bruce and Lord Justice Slade [Judgment delivered November 21] Where there was a technical irregularity in a step in an action, such as a failure to comply strictly with the Rules of the Supreme Court, the party who had failed so to comply was not entitled to rely on the irregular step pending the exercise by the court of its powers under Order 2, rule 2 to decide whether to kill or cure the proceedings.

The Cours of Appeal so held

The Court of Appeal so held dismissing an appeal by the plaintiffs Metroinvest Ansalt from a judgment and order of Mr Recorder Collins made on May 21, 1984 that the sum standing in court to the credit of the action be paid out forthwith to the solicitors of the defendants. Supreme Court that the notice should be given in the prescribed

On the same day the defendants decided that they had been alerted by information they had received from scrutiny of documents received by the district surveyor that the value of the property was or might be significantly less than the value previously attributed to it. The defendants therefore sought to withdraw the sum paid into court and the recorder exercised his power under Order 2 and allowed them to On behalf of the plaintiffs it was submitted that failure to give notice strictly complying with the form prescribed was an irregularity but that on the proper construction of Order 2 an irregular step in an action was valid inter partes unless and until it was set aside. Therefore the notice of acceptance given on May 18 was a good notice and the plaintiffs would have been entitled to take the money out In his Lordship's view that construction was quite wrong. On the proper construction of Order 2, rule 1. from the moment that proceedings were tainted by irregu-larity through failure to comply with rules, the irregular step or document was not valid inter partes until the matter was brought before the court and the court decided in which way to exercise its jurisdiction conferred by Order 2, rule 1.

Order 2, rule 2 did not restrict the power of the court nor did it have any effect in continuing as valid an any effect in continuing as valid an irregular step or document until the application under that rule was made. Accordingly the recorder exercised his jurisdiction correctly.

The next submission on behalf of the plaintiffs was that as a matter of principle the practice should be for the court to see whether any prejudice had been coused to the opposite party by the irregularity as such, and if it had not, as in the present case, the court should not contemplate setting aside the

It was submitted that extraneous circumstances were irrelevant and the court was concerned only with the consequences of the irregularity. His Lordship did not agree with that Order 2 rule 2 was framed so as to give the court the widest possible powers in order to do justice. There was ample material before the recorder to entitle him to say that the circumstances of the case would make it quite unjust to order payment of the money in court to e plaintiffs,

Cross-examining upon assets

House of Spring Gardens Ltd that the source of the court's and Others v Waite and Others jurisdiction to grant Mareva injunctions was section 37 of the Supreme Court Act 1981 which gave Bruce and Lord Justice Slade [Judgment delivered November 1] In the case where the defendants to an action seemed determined to but their assets beyond the reach of the plaintiffs, the High Court had jurisdiction to order a cross-examin-ation upon the affidavits of defendants who were subject to Mareva injunctions, for the purpose of ascertaining the true extent and location of their assets.

The Court of Appeal so held allowing an appeal by the plaintiffs, House of Spring Gardens Ltd. Armourshield Ltd and Mr Michael Sacks from an order made by Mr Justice Scott who on May 21, 1984 discharged an order made by Mr Justice Nourse on February 8, 1984 granting the plaintiffs leave to crossexamine the first defendant. Mr William Edward Waite and the second defendant. Mr Seamus Waite on their respective affidavits. Mr Gavin Lightman, QC and Mr A. G. Boyle for the plaintiffs: Mr L. G. Kosmin for the first defendant; Mr R. W. Kirk for the second the court power to do so if it was "just and convenient".

It was submitted on behalf of the defendants that it could not be "just and convenient" for the court to order cross-examination on a defendant's affidavit except for the purpose of determining issues which had to be determined by the court. That argument was not well founded.

The court had to see that the Mareva jurisdiction was not used as a weapon, but cases could arise where on the facts the court could take the view that to cross-examine on an affidavit was the only "just and convenient" way of achieving the purpose of the injunction by identifying the assets.

Accordingly his Lordship differed from Mr Justice Scott's view that the court had no jurisdiction to make an order for cross-examination on affidavits relating to the defendants' assets and that the order was a nubity. LORD JUSTICE CUMMING-

BRUCE agreeing, said that the Mareva jurisdiction was in many respects anomalous and the court had power to take such steps as were practical to procure that where an order had been made, the defend-ants identified their assets and disclosed the whereabouts of those assets, and that such steps were taken as would enable the order to have effect as completely and as

There could be situations where in the circumstances of a case it would be more sensible, if only for reasons of speed and urgency, not to order further affidavits to fill a vacuum in the affidavits, but to proceed at once to order the defendants to be cross-examined on their affidavits. the purpose being to elicit with greater particularity the extent and whereabouts of their

A situation often arose when it was urgently necessary for the court to intervene to prevent a defendant from frustrating the object of proceedings and an order to crossexamine upon unsatisfactory affi-davits was one course which the court had jurisdiction to take. When such cross-examination took place it was entirely a matter for the presiding judge properly to control the cross-examination.

Sanctioning scheme of arrangement statement was entirely accurate

In re Minster Assets plc Before Mr Justice Harman

(Judgment delivered November 6) The role of the court in sanctioning a scheme of arrangement under section 206 of the Companies Act 1948, when there interests after their recommen-dation to the shareholders and approve the scheme, was to be satisfied that no reasonable shareholder would have acted differently had the changes in shareholdings been disclosed in a separate circular. Mr Justice Harman so held in the Chancery Division in sanctioning, ubject to amendments, such a scheme. Miss Mary Arden for the company. MR JUSTICE HARMAN said that between the issue of the circular recommending a scheme of arrangement by the directors of Minster Assets ple and its merchant bank advisers. Hill Samuel & Co Ltd, and meeting to approve the scheme there had been certain dealings by directors in the company's shares.

Miss Arden, having referred to In re Dorman Long & Co Lid ([1934] Ch 635) to the Cohen committee's ca 633) to the Conen committee's report (which led to the passing of the Companies Act 1947) and to section 207 (1) (a) of the Companies Act 1948, pressed the court to hold that the dealings in question were not such that the court should withhold its sanction to the scheme withhold its sanction to the scheme

She had also referred to the unreported decision of Mr Justice Slade in In re Jessel Trust Lid, given on July 31, 1979, where he had refused to sanction a scheme on the ground that between the issue of the circular and the approval of the scheme there had been a very substantial dealing by the com-pany's chairman, Oliver Jessel, in the company's shares, holding that while no question of good faith arose the views of the shareholders might very well have been affected had they known of it. In the Jessel case, as in the the memorandum stated that its present case, the explanatory registered office would be in when set out. His Lordship followed Miss Arden's argument that the circular could not possibly give details of, or be concerned with, as yet non-existent interests, but none the less he considered that the Jessel case the facts were such that a observation of Mr Justice Slade to had been changes in the directors the effect that the legislature, in interests after their recommendation to the shareholders and before the shareholders meeting to shareholders should always be informed of the directors' material interests, was certainly the right underlie all interpretations of the It was of the most fundamental importance that persons should not be given recommendations, even if made on a disclosure of true facts, if at the same time there was a covert or secret intention to alter the facts then disclosed immediately or shortly after the circular and before the relevant meeting.

Mr Justice Stade had expressed himself in two ways, in one place saying that if the circumstances were such that it might affect a shareholder's attitude, then the matter must be disclosed before a conclusive vote was taken and, in the other place, that if a reasonable should trouble the court.

Miss Arden's final submission was correct, namely that the court's role was to be satisfied that no reasonable shareholder would have changed his decision as to how to act on the scheme if the changes had been disclosed.
In the result, his Lordship would sanction the scheme, subject to certain amendments and would confirm the reduction of capital. He would give the necessary direction under section 12 of the Companies Act 1980, that the company should company although its capital would be reduced to below £50,000. Solicitors: Freshfields.

Cross-border company

In re Baby Moon (UK) Ltd No company registered in England should have its registered office in Scotland Mr Justice Harman said on November 6, giving leave in the Chancery Division for a petition to be served out of the intelliging on Baby. out of the jurisdiction on Baby Moon (UK) Lld, a company registered in England, but whose registered office was at Livingston

HIS LORDSHIP said that it appeared that an extraordinary state of affairs existed which was never Companies Acts. It was the duty of the registrar to register companies in England, pursuant to section 12 of the Companies Act 1948, as amended, if England. Therefore the company was correctly registered in England. The address of the registered office did not refer to any country, but merely to "Livingston".

His Lordship accepted the petitioner's submission that the court had jurisdiction under section 218 (1) of the 1948 Act to wind up any company registered in England. The certificate of incorporation showed that the company was registered in England, and that was conclusive under section 3 of the Companies Act 1980.

No company registered in England should have its registered It was right that the company should answer its obligations here, and his Lordship therefore gave leave for the relevant and necessary leave for the relevant and necessary adjournment to serve and advertise the petition out of the jurisdiction.

Residence rule not unlawful if for all

Robert Fearon and Co Ltd v The Irish Land Commission Case 182/83

Before Lord Mackenzie Stuart, President and Judges O. Due, C. Kakouris, U. Everling, K. Bahl-mann, Y. Galmot and R. Joliet Advocate General: M. Darmon [Judgment delivered November 6] A residence requirement imposed by a member state for the purposes of exemption from compulsory purchase measures and which applied equally to its own nationals and to those of the other member states did not amount to discrimination which might offend against article 52 of the EEC Treaty.

The Irish Land Commission

decided to acquire compulsorily land owned by the appellant, Fearon and Co Ltd. a company registered under Irish law. Section 32 (3) of the Land Act 1933, as amended by section 35 of the Land Act 1965.

provided that the Irish Land Commission could not exercise its powers of compulsory acquisition against persons who had resided for more than one year on or within three miles of the land concerned or against bodies corporate all of whose shareholders fulfilled the same requirement. All of the five shareholders of the appellant company were British nationals none of whom met that requirement The company was not therefore allowed to avail itself of the exception but, following its submission that the residence requirement was incompatible with principle of freedom establishment laid down by article 58 of the EEC Treaty, the Supreme Court of Ireland stayed proceedings and referred the question for a preliminary ruling under article 177 of the EEC Treaty.

In its judgment the Court of Justice of the European Communities held as follows: Since Fearon was an Irish company for the purposes of article 58 of the EEC Treaty, it could not claim in Ireland the benefit of the right of establishment granted to companies formed under the laws of the other member states. The question raised by the Supreme Court of Ireland sought to however, whether nationals of other member states who had exercised their right of establishment in Ireland under article 52 by participating in the formation of a company within the meaning of article 58 could be required to meet a residence requirement.

That question must be answered in the affirmative if the obligation to reside on or near land was imposed by a member state, within the the ownership of rural land, both on its own nationals and on those of the other member states and was applied to them equally. A residence requirement so delimited did not in fact amount to discrimination which might be found to offend against article 52.
On those grounds the court ruled

Article 52 did not prevent a member state from making exemption from compulsory acquisition measures adopted under legislation governing the ownership of rural land subject to a requirement that nationals of other member states who had taken part in the formation of a land-owning company reside on or near the land if that residence requirement also applied to nationals of that member state and if the powers of compulsory acquisition were not exercised in a discriminatory manner.

Writers and journalists working from home generally experience a eeling that soggy tea bags outnumber the completed pages of A4 paper. Yet still they are not deterred from a profession which can lurch from inactivity to hyperactivity, from conviviality to loneliness, from glamour to boredom, has no rigid career structure, odd hours, and is not generally well paid.

So why become a journalist? Many want to do nothing else. And they are the ones who go down well at interviews. Leo Simmonds, training manager of Express Newspapers, emphasised that when he talks to young men and women he questions their resolve. With jobs few and far between at any level of the profession

The conventional way to begin a career as a newspaper journalist is to join a local paper. A minimum of five 'O' levels are required. National newspapers, save in exceptional circumstances, do not take on beginners. This is partly because the National Union of Journalists maintain that if there were to be in-house training in Fleet Street, journalists would not be recruited from the provinces, and partly because dead-MRECTOR of masic at Peterstouse. In magazine, provincial and Fleet Street journalism I have. however, come across journalists who have had little interest in some of their work. The urge they had was to for the Training of Journalists, who write a good story, and to write it well.

Journalists are an amalgam of the human race. It is impractical to pigeon-hole them. What does the Arts Editor of The Times have in common with the Daily Mirror's crime reporter?

Despite one's misgivings over whether the most gifted should have to spend time in the provinces and one's doubts about the efficacy of examining trainees in such an idiosyncratic profession as journa-lism, the NCTI organize a proficiency test for newcomers who begin in the provinces - the place where most journalists work,

The normal entry into radio and journalism is via a newspaper or to take a course and go on to a local radio station. The BBC, who have founded their own local radio trainee scheme, stipulate that grounding.

> The industry is on the decline

There are 12 courses open to applicants in England, Scotland and Ireland, organised by JACTRJ, the joint advisory committee for the training of radio journalists. Solemnity amid Cenotaph security

MONDAY NOVEMBER 12 1984

By Robin Young

Security at yesterday's Remembrance Day service at the Cenotaph in Whitehall was the tightest that the annual ceremony has ever seen. Even the wreaths that were to be laid were checked for explosives, and everybody who was allowed within a hundred yards of the Queen and other members of the Royal Family was searched first. During the service, armed police on surrounding rooftops scanned the crowds through high-powered binoculars.

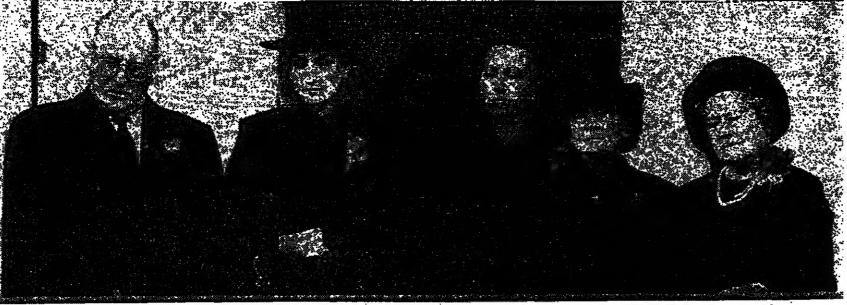

As throughout the weekend. however, with the Lord Mayor's Show and the British Legion's Festival of Remem-brance at the Albert Hail on Saturday, security was entrusted exclusively to the Metropolitan Police and Special Branch. Reports that members of the Special Air Service had been deployed to reinforce the Royal Family's bodyguard were denied last

There was, despite tense security, a full turnout for the occasion. Crowds began to form three hours before the service, and the pavements were packed as tightly as police would permit from Parliament Square to Horseguards Avenue.

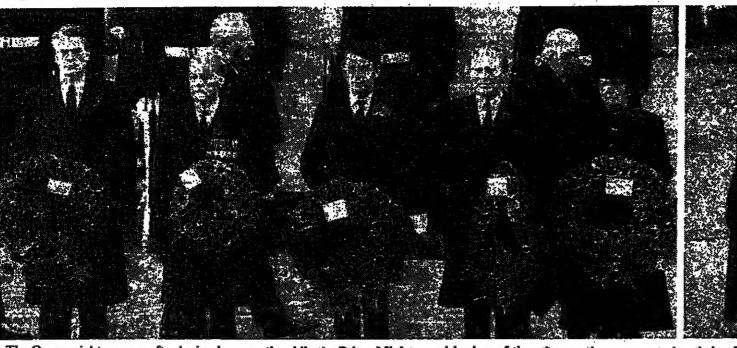

The Queen wa followed in laying her wreath by the Duke of Edinburgh and the Prince of Wales, both in navel uniform, and Prince Michael of Kent who was wearing the uniform of an officer in the Hossars. Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother, Princess Anne, the Princess of Wales and King Olaf of Norway watched from the balconies of the old Home Office, with Princess Alexandra and Mr Angus Ogilvy. and the Duke and Duchess of

The laying of the Royal wreaths was followed by those laid by the Prime Minister, and other party leaders. Dr David Owen of the Social Democratic Party, permitted to lay his own wreath for the first time, came fifth, behind Mr James Molyneaux, whose Official Unionists are the fourth biggest party in the Commons.

There were delays while the Royal Family, political leaders, and Commonwealth representatives who had laid wreaths from their countries in order of independence, were ushered back to Horseguards Parade through the old Home

It says that shop stewards who called the strike had not followed the wishes of mass meetings which had recorded majority votes against starting the strike. Dublin furious over stalling charge

Miss Glenholmes is sought for questioning on a series of Provisional IRA attacks in London 1981. The attacks, including the nailbomb outside the Chelsea Barracks, led to three deaths and many injuries. Detectives would also like to ask her what she knows about the Grand Hotel bombing in Brighton last month.

Scotland Yard confirmed last night that an anti-terrorist squad has asked the Dublin authorities to start proceedings against Miss Glenholmes.

Last night, The Sunday Times issued this statement: "The Sunday Times has acted responsibly throughout its investigations into both cases. The paper has been conscious of the need not to run stories that could jeopardize police investigations. The editor felt duty bound to publish the story this week end in view of the apparent delays in arresting the two suspects and in view of the fact that the issue of the warrant for Glenholmes had now become fairly widely heavy as gunsmoke over Flanders field. Ghostly cows loomed up and disappeared beside the motorway. All was unreal but the voice on the car

"Even the wreaths poppies at the Cenotaph in Whitehall were searched-"Said the voice from beyond the mist. "...Nicaragua has described this as an unwar-rented American intrusion into its air space," it went on.
"...The Ministry of Defence has denied reports that the men of HMS Conqueror played tape-recordings of the screams of the crew of the General Belgrano as they burnt to death..."

Inside its cocoon of mist, pres was bright and sunny with the great reconstructed cloth hall rearing up into a pale blue sky beside the reconstructed cathedral of St Martin. Across the road at the modern Anglican Memorial Church of St George, the doors were open because the congregation was bursting out into the street.

As they sang "Abide with Me" - the national anthem of the Land of the Dead Someone whipped off a beret to catch the overflow.

Out in the sunshine waited detachment of the Devon Fire Brigade. In a cafe opposite the cathedral, sipping beer, the band of the Ypres Fire Brigade waited for 11 o clock.

Wiping their lips, they tumbled out into the sunshine, adjusted their plumed caps. and marched down the street to the town's own war memorial. On the stroke of the hour the band crashed into the Belgian national anthem.

Then it was round the corner for a quick "Marseillaise" before the simple plaque in memory of the French dead before the main event of the day - the ceremony at the reconstructed Menin Gate.

The Menin Gate from a distance looks like a triumphal arch, but close to it is a long, deep tunnel. It has to be deep to give space for the 54,896 names carved inside it of the men of the British Army who fell "but to whom the fortunes of war denied the known and honoured burial given to their comrades in death". Over a quarter of a million of them lie in marked graves in the fields around the town. Siegfried Sassoon was outraged by the gate. "A pile of peace-complacent stone" he called it, covered in "intolerably namcless names"

"Well might the dead who struggled in the slime sepulchre of crime." Smiling Company Sergeant Major Bill Hay, once of the Ninth Royal Scots Highlanders, and now of West Hampstead, knew at first-hand what had angered Sassoon. At the start there were no gas masks. The men were told to take off their socks, urinate on them, and breathe through this improvised filter. Bill Hay survived, and escaped down the railway tracks to "Yip-pee", as he prefers to call

After that, he went through most of the battlefields on the Western Front from Arras, where he was buried up to the neck, to Passchendale and St Quentin where he was taken prisoner in March 1918.

But at the Menin Gate, Bill Hay still remembers with a strange mixed-up pride those months of senseless death, and yesterday with his medals and Glengarry bonnet, he was

The gate is a tourist attraction every evening at eight, when a trumpeter from the Ypres Fire Brigade plays the "Last Post". It began as a Belgian tribute shortly after the gate was built but the trumpet call has now become a symbol of freedom to the people of Y pres themselves.
